fighting fleet (c). These ships are not included in the term "His Majesty's ships in commission" used in the Naval Discipline Acts (d); they carry no guns, do not fly the pennant or white ensign, are not commanded by commissioned officers, and occupy no position of privilege under international law. Prior to 1906 the legal status of these ships and their crews was very uncertain. They belonged to the Crown, and therefore could not be registered (e) as British ships under the Merchant Shipping Acts (f); they were not "His Majesty's ships in commission," and therefore were exempt from ordinary naval discipline. In consequence, for the maintenance of discipline upon them there existed no legal sanction whatever, nor could they lawfully be given proper ship's papers. In 1906 power was given to register Government ships for the purposes of the Merchant Shipping Acts (f) under such regulations, and subject to such modification of the Acts, as might be provided by Order in Council (g).

Personnel.

4. The personnel may be divided into the following classes: (1) the Royal Navy proper; (2) the Reserves; (3) the Volunteer Forces; (4) the Indian Marine; (5) the naval forces provided and maintained by the self-governing dominions, which may become an integral part of the Royal Navy in time of war; and (6) the Coastguard, which, though not usually a part of the fighting force of the Navy, may in certain circumstances be called into active service afloat: to these may be added the Royal Marines when on board ship (h).

The persons composing the personnel of the Navy enjoy certain privileges and suffer certain disabilities in consequence of their membership of the forces of the Crown (i).

Salvage
services.

5. Salvage services rendered by His Majesty's ships are, as regards remuneration, in exactly the same position as services rendered by ships privately owned (k), subject to the following limitations:—

(1) No claim is allowed for any loss, damage, or risk caused to the

(f) See title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

(g) Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 80 (1). Government ships are defined as being ships not forming part of the Navy, but belonging to or held by any person on behalf of the Crown, and, therefore, not registerable under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60) (Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 80 (3)). The Order in Council, 22nd March, 1911 (Stat. R. & O. 1911, p. 238), by which Government ships may be registered, excludes them from the purview of many of the sections of the Merchant Shipping Acts. Provision is made for the exercise and performance by the Admiralty of the powers conferred and duties imposed on owners by any section of the Acts so made applicable.

(h) For the law applicable to each of these classes, see pp. 7 et seq., post.

ship, or her equipment, or stores, or for the use of any stores or other articles belonging to the Crown supplied in rendering these services, or for any other expense or loss sustained by the Crown by reason thereof (l).

(2) No claim for salvage services by one of His Majesty's ships may be finally adjudicated upon unless the consent of the Admiralty to its prosecution be proved. If it be not proved the claim stands dismissed with costs (m).

(3) Provision is made for the steps to be taken where salvage services are rendered outside the limits of the United Kingdom and the four adjoining seas by the commander or crew of one of His Majesty's ships (n).

(4) Money received either as salvage or as a gift in lieu thereof or in any other shape is distributable by the Accountant-General alone in accordance with the prize proclamation, or in such other manner as the Admiralty may direct. No such money may be accepted without the consent of the Admiralty (o).

(5) No claim for salvage remuneration can be made in rem against His Majesty's ships or stores salvaged (p).

In practice, however, the Admiralty always allows salvage remuneration. Sometimes the judge of the Admiralty Court has acted as arbitrator in such cases (a). But the present practice appears to be to allow ex gratiâ salvage remuneration fixed by an independent arbitrator.

6. No commanding officer is allowed to receive on board any merchandise for conveyance (b). This rule is subject to an exception in the case of specie and jewels (c).

SECT. 2.—Administration.

7. Before 1832 (d) the Navy was administered by three distinct departments, namely, the Admiralty Office, the Navy Board, and the Victualling Board. In 1832 the two latter departments were abolished and their duties transferred to what is now known as the Board of Admiralty (e).

The Board is composed of the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral appointed by letters patent under the Great Seal. Its constitution has varied from time to time, and rests now on an Order in Council of the 10th August, 1904 (f). It consists of the First Lord of the Admiralty, who is invariably a member of the Cabinet, the First Sea Lord, the Second Sea Lord, the Third Sea Lord and Controller, the Fourth Sea Lord, the Civil Lord, the Additional Civil Lord (f), the Parliamentary and Financial Secretary, and the Permanent Secretary.

Distribution of business.

The distribution of business is throughout under the control of the First Lord. Subject to his control, the First Sea Lord is responsible for the distribution of the Navy and its organisation for war, the Second Sea Lord for the personnel and discipline, the Third Sea Lord for the matériel and the military construction of the fleet, the Fourth Sea Lord for stores and transport, the Civil Lord for works and buildings, the civil staff for naval establishments, Greenwich Hospital and Marine Schools, the Additional Civil Lord for contracts and dockyard business (g), the Parliamentary Secretary for finance, and the Permanent Secretary for the management and discipline of the office, recommendations for appointments, correspondence, and the like secretarial duties (h).

(e) The Navy Board was first constituted in 1512; in the following reign, that of Edward VI., the constitution was revised, and the civil management of the Navy entrusted to a board of principal officers, subordinate to the Lord High Admiral. At the Restoration, the Duke of York, being appointed Lord High Admiral, reconstituted the Navy Board, appointing three Commissioners to act with the Treasurer of the Navy, namely, the Comptroller, the Surveyor, and the Clerk of the Acts. The number of Commissioners varied from time to time, and a separate Victualling Board was established. The Treasurer of the Navy was a member of the Navy Board, and obtained from the Treasury the sums which the Navy Board directed him to pay. The office was abolished in 1835, and its duties assigned to the office of Paymaster-General as finally constituted in 1848.

(f) As varied by the Admiralty Minute of the 1st January, 1912 (Times, 8th January, 1912), reviving the office of Additional Civil Lord. SECT. 3.—Entry and Service.

SECT. 3.

Entry and Service.

Raising and maintenance.

8. There is no statutory restriction of the prerogative of the Crown to raise and maintain a naval force (i), though the conditions of entry and service in the Navy are to some extent regulated by statute (k). The discretion of the Crown, whether restricted by statute or otherwise, is in practice exercised in accordance with rules laid down by the Board of Admiralty.

The personnel of the Navy is divided into two grades, officers and men.

9. Officers may be commissioned, subordinate, or warrant officers; petty officers are included in the term "men" (l). The granting or the depriving of a commission is a prerogative of the Crown, and is exercised at the present time by the Admiralty under the general powers conferred by the patent appointing the Commissioners (m). Officers of the military branch receive a commission on being confirmed in the rank of sub-lieutenant, and again on promotion to Flag-rank. All other officers receive commissions on their first appointment to commissioned rank (n).

Officers.

The commissioned officers of the Navy are divided into four branches—a military branch, an engineer branch, a medical branch, and a civil branch, which includes all other naval officers (o). Chaplains, though they are commissioned officers, hold no naval rank, but retain when afloat the position to which their office would entitle them on shore. The Chaplain of the Fleet is considered the head of the chaplains (p).

Subdivisions.

Admission to commissioned rank is obtained by examination after a period of training, in the case of the military and engineering branches, as naval cadet; in the case of the medical branch, as acting surgeon; or in the case of the civil branch, as assistant clerk (q). Chaplains are appointed in the first instance for four

Discipline.	An officer cannot resign his appointment at his own will and pleasure (b). It is submitted, however, that the mere acceptance of a commission would not of itself and in all circumstances suffice to bring an officer within the jurisdiction of a court-martial for refusing to enter upon any particular office, at all events unless he is actually borne on the books of one of His Majesty's ships in commission (c).
Men.	10. The service of men in the Navy has, since early times, been partially regulated by statute (d). Two methods have been employed, that of forcible impressment (e) and that of voluntary enlistment. The former method is now in abeyance, and entry into the Navy is on a purely voluntary basis.
Service.	It would appear that there is no limit to the prerogative of the Crown in fixing the duration of the service of seamen in the Navy, however they may have entered. On the other hand, the service of a seaman naturally determines on the arrival of his ship at a port in the United Kingdom after the completion of the employment for which she was commissioned (f). To meet the difficulties occasioned by this condition of things, it has been provided that no person should be detained against his consent in the naval service of the Crown for a longer period than five years unless he had voluntarily entered for a longer period (g); but men may enter or re-enter for continuous or general service for longer periods, if and as the Admiralty regulations allow (h). In the case of boys the period must not exceed twelve years, or if he entered under the age of eighteen, must not extend beyond his reaching the age of thirty (h).
Re-engage- ment.	The period for which a seaman can be compelled to serve is reckoned from the date upon which he entered into the engagement under which he is serving without regard to any breach in its continuity occasioned by desertion, invalidity, imprisonment or any other cause (i).

SECT. 3.

Entry and Service.

11. Any person who, upon entering or offering himself to enter the Navy, makes any false statement with intent to deceive any officer authorised to enter seamen or others for the Navy is liable to be treated as a rogue and vagabond (j).

False statements.

Any certificate which is by law evidence of the birth of a person and any declaration under the Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (k), by the parent or a guardian of a person entering into the naval service of the Crown as a boy, respecting the place of birth of such boy, and a declaration made by a man respecting his place of birth, is evidence for the purpose of the Naval Discipline Acts (l) of the facts stated in such declarations (m).

Certificates and declarations as evidence.

A merchant seaman leaving his ship to enter the naval service is not a deserter, nor can he thereby incur any punishment or loss whatever. Any stipulation to the contrary in any agreement is void, and its insertion therein renders the person responsible therefor liable to a fine. The effects and money, including any arrears of wages, of such a seaman must be paid over to the officer authorised to receive him into the service. But any wages advanced to and not earned at the time the seaman left his ship can be recovered out of his naval pay. Further, by an application to the High Court, any moneys paid to a necessary substitute in excess of what would have been payable to the seaman under his agreement can be recovered from the Admiralty (n).

SECT. 4.—Discipline.

12. The maintenance of discipline in the Navy is regulated by the Naval Discipline Act (o), which constitutes the penal code of the Navy.

Naval Discipline Act.

13. The persons subject to naval discipline are:—

(5) Spies for the enemy and persons on board any of His Majesty's ships endeavouring to seduce persons subject to the Naval Discipline Act (c) from their allegiance (d);

War.

14. The naval penal code deals first with breaches of naval discipline and duty. These are specified under the Articles of War (f). For all these naval offences punishments are specified, and wherever committed, on board ship or on shore, within or without the United Kingdom, by a person subject to naval discipline, they are punishable under the naval penal code (g).

code.

15. The purview of the naval penal code is, however, not confined merely to breaches of naval discipline and duty: it extends also to offences against the ordinary criminal law.

For such offences, if committed in any harbour, haven, or creek, or on any lake or river, or in any one of His Majesty's dockyards, victualling yards, steam factory yards, or on any gun wharf or in any arsenal, barrack, or hospital belonging to His Majesty, whether within or without the United Kingdom, or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or at any place on shore out of the United Kingdom, a person subject to naval discipline may be tried under the naval penal code (h), and punished either as for an act to the prejudice of good order and naval discipline, or in the same manner as under the ordinary criminal law (i).

SECT. 4.
Discipline.

No powers thus conferred upon the naval authorities destroy or supersede the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of law or operate to prevent a person punishable by ordinary law being punished otherwise than under the provisions of the naval penal code (k).

Jurisdiction
of civil courts.

Further, whether for offences against naval discipline or duty or for breaches of the ordinary law, no person, except offenders who have avoided justice or fled from apprehension, can be tried and punished under the naval penal code after the lapse of three years from the commission of the offence, or of one year after his return to the United Kingdom if he has been absent therefrom for three years (l).

Time limit
for prosecutions.

16. This naval penal code is administered by courts-martial (m) or, with certain limitations, summarily by the commanding officer of the ship to which the offender belongs. The summary jurisdiction extends to all non-capital offences, except those committed by an officer (n), but there is no power under it to award penal servitude, or more than three months' imprisonment or detention (a). Moreover, except in cases of mutiny, corporal punishment can only be ordered after an inquiry and report by one or more officers appointed by the commanding officer (b).

Administra-
penal code.

17. Special provision is made for subordinate officers. In their case the punishment of forfeiture of time or seniority can be imposed for not more than three months by the commanding officer, for not more than six months by the commander-in-chief on a foreign station, and for not more than twelve months by the Admiralty. Further, the commander-in-chief on a foreign station may impose upon them the punishments numbered (8), (9) and (10) in the list of punishments set out elsewhere (c).

circumstances of the loss, capture, wreck, or destruction of one of His Majesty's ships (f), or to investigate a specific charge (g).

A court-martial is a public court, must be held on one of His Majesty's ships of war and sit from day to day, except on Sundays (h).

General inquiry.

19. In the case of a general inquiry into loss or capture a warrant may be issued by the convening authority (i) without any complaint being addressed to him (k). No specific charge is made against anyone, and all the officers and crew can be tried by one and the same court, before which any of them may be required to give evidence, though not such as might criminate himself (l).

It is submitted that no punishment can be imposed by such a court-martial, which is in reality nothing more than a court of inquiry (m).

Specific charge.

"Circumstantial letter" and other documents.

20. A court-martial convened to investigate a specific charge is initiated by a letter of complaint, called the "circumstantial letter," addressed to the convening authority, stating in detail the facts on which a charge is made (n). This letter may not refer in any way to the accused's previous record (n), and can only be admitted as evidence against him if at the trial he pleads guilty (o). With the circumstantial letter is sent a formal document in the nature of an indictment stating the charge or charges, with a list of the witnesses for the prosecution, a summary of evidence, a certified copy of the accused's certificate of service, and a certified extract from the conduct book of any offences from the time of his joining the ship to the date of the offence (p). If satisfied by this information that there are reasonable grounds for considering that an offence has been committed by the person accused, the convening authority authorises an officer by warrant to act as president of the court-martial, and sends to him the circumstantial letter and the formal charge (q).

Prosecutor.

21. As a general rule, the commanding officer of the ship to which the accused belongs acts as prosecutor, but some other officer

(l) Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), s. 92.

(m) It was the better practice, before the passing of the Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), for a charge to be embodied in the warrant convening a court-martial under these circumstances; compare a form in Hickman, Law and Practice of Naval Courts Martial, 1851. But even where no charge was made, it was not unusual to inflict various punishments as the result of these inquiries. This abuse survived the passing of the Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), though it is elementary justice that no man should be punished except on a formulated charge against which he has the opportunity to defend himself; compare Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), s. 93.

is appointed by the convening authority to act as prosecutor in cases where it is undesirable or impossible that the commanding officer of the accused's ship should act (r).

SECT. 4.
Discipline.

22. The accused must have notice in writing of the date and time of his trial and proper opportunity to prepare his defence. He should receive a copy of the circumstantial letter, the formal charge, and a list of the witnesses for the prosecution at least twenty-four hours before the trial. Any witnesses he may desire to call are summoned by the judge-advocate, and he is entitled to obtain any person or persons to assist him in the conduct of his case (s). A person so assisting may advise on all points, but requires the permission of the president to examine or cross-examine witnesses. He may not, however, examine the prisoner, nor may he address the court (t), though in practice he prepares a written defence for the accused and reads it to the court.

Notice of charge to accused.

23. The prisoner, who is in the custody of a provost-marshal (a), has an opportunity of objecting to any particular member of the court or generally to its constitution, and any objection is decided by the votes of the court (b).

Objections.

The members of the court and the judge-advocate having taken the prescribed oaths (c), the trial is begun by the reading of the charge and the circumstantial letter by the judge-advocate (d). The prisoner is not obliged to plead, and a plea of guilty involves the admission of the material accuracy of the circumstantial letter. It is then only open to the prisoner to make a statement in mitigation of punishment, and to call evidence as to character before the court deliberates on its sentence (e).

Trial.

Pleading to charge.

In the absence of a plea of guilty the case for the prosecution begins at once by the calling of witnesses in support of the charge. Ordinary criminal procedure is followed, except that witnesses cannot be present without the president's permission, and that both the prosecutor and any member of the court are competent witnesses. The examination must be on oath, and oral, and, except in one case, in the presence of the court (f).

Case for prosecution.

When the case for the prosecution is closed time may be allowed the prisoner for the preparation of his defence, the court adjourning if necessary (g). In making it he must be granted considerable latitude. It may be either oral or in writing. In the latter case, it is read to the court either by himself, his friend, or by the judge-advocate. When the prisoner is ready and the court reassembled, if the prisoner is the only witness for the defence, his evidence is then taken. It is followed immediately by his statement in defence. If the prisoner does not desire to give evidence, or if there are witnesses other than himself, he must make his statement immediately on the opening of his case (h).

After the conclusion of the evidence for the defence the prisoner, with the consent of the court, may deal with discrepancies between his own evidence or his own statement in defence and the evidence of his witnesses and comment on new facts elicited (h).

Finding.

24. At the close of the evidence the prisoner is removed, and with the assistance of the judge-advocate the court arrives at its finding (i).

The decision of the court in all matters, except as to sentence of death, goes by the majority (k); but the finding must be signed by every member of the court (i).

It is competent for the court (a) to find the intent with which an offence was committed where intent is of the essence of the charge, and the intent found is less grave than the intent charged (l); (b) in certain cases to find a prisoner guilty of a lesser offence of the same class on a charge of a greater (m); (c) to find that the prisoner is insane (n); or (d) to record a verdict of honourable acquittal where the charge affected personal honour (o).

On the reopening of the court the prisoner is brought in and the finding read to him and, on a verdict of guilty, specific evidence as to the character of the prisoner may be adduced before sentence (p).

Sentence.

25. The court is again cleared and the punishment agreed upon. The sentence drawn up by the judge-advocate is signed by every member of the court, the prisoner is once more brought in, sentence pronounced, and the court dissolved. The finding and sentence must be reported straightway to the commander-in-chief or the senior officer, and the minutes of the whole proceedings transmitted to the Admiralty (q).

26. In some cases for a specific offence the punishment prescribed is peremptory, and admits of neither alteration nor diminution (r). In others the punishment prescribed necessarily involves lesser consequences (s). In one case punishment is left entirely to the discretion of the court (t).

SECT. 4.
Discipline.
Punishment.

In most cases the addition to the prescribed punishment of the words "or such other punishment as is hereafter mentioned" gives a court-martial or an officer exercising his summary powers a wide discretion in the imposition of punishment; but this discretion is confined to imposing punishments of a degree inferior to the one specified. In the case of any offence not punishable with death or penal servitude, unless otherwise expressly provided, the offender may be proceeded against and punished according to the laws and customs in such cases used at sea (a).

Discretionary powers.

27. The following are the punishments which may be inflicted under the naval penal code, arranged in order of gravity (b), and the Admiralty has power to suspend, annul, or modify any sentence except a sentence of death, which can only be remitted by His Majesty. But no modification by the Admiralty may increase the punishment involved in any sentence, either in its degree or in its duration (c).

Nature of punishment :

(1) Death may be inflicted under the naval penal code in cases of murder (d), of acting as a spy for the enemy (e), of treachery, cowardice, mutiny, or desertion to the enemy (f), and of burning any dockyard, magazine, building, stores, vessels, or any similar property, not belonging to an enemy, pirate, or rebel (g).

death ;

Judgment of death can only be passed with the concurrence of a two-thirds majority, or if the officers present do not exceed five, with the concurrence of four of them. A sentence of death can only be remitted by His Majesty, and, except in cases of mutiny, can only be carried out after confirmation by the Admiralty, or, on a foreign station, by the Commander-in-Chief (h).

(r) Cowardice or traitorous conduct or murder involves a sentence of death (ibid., ss. 2, 3, 5, 45); scandalous or fraudulent conduct, or cruelty, on the part of an officer involves a sentence of dismissal, with disgrace, from the service; conduct "unbecoming the character of an officer" involves dismissal without disgrace (ibid., s. 28).

servitude ;

(2) The punishment next in severity is penal servitude. It can only be awarded by a court-martial (i) ; it may be for life, but cannot be for less than three years (k), and in all cases it involves dismissal from the service with disgrace (l).

A sentence of penal servitude by court-martial carries with it all the consequences of a similar sentence under the ordinary law. It runs from the day of sentence, and the order of the Admiralty or the warrant of the Commander-in-Chief, or of the officer who ordered the court-martial, is a sufficient warrant for the transfer of the prisoner to the prison to undergo his sentence (m).

with disgrace ;

(3) Dismissal from the service with disgrace (n). This involves in all cases a forfeiture of all pay, head money, bounty, salvage, prize money, allowances, annuities, pensions, gratuities, medals and decorations earned by or granted to the offender and an incapacity again in any way to serve His Majesty (o).

(4) Imprisonment (p) may not exceed two years (q), or, if inflicted summarily, three months (r). Under the provisions of the naval penal code it may include a period of solitary confinement (a), or of hard labour (b), or both, in addition to corporal punishment (c). It involves disrating in the case of a petty officer and reduction to the ranks in the case of a non-commissioned officer of Marines, and the stoppage of all wages and pay (d).

punishment ;

Corporal punishment (e), which is restricted to forty-eight lashes, can never be inflicted on an officer, or, except in cases of mutiny, on a petty or non-commissioned officer ; it cannot be inflicted without an inquiry by one or more officers under the direction of the commanding officer (f).

A term of imprisonment runs from the day of sentence (g), unless (1) the offender is already serving a sentence by a court-martial for a former offence, and the court directs the latter sentence to run from the completion of the former, or (2) the ship is at sea or off a place where there is no proper prison or detention quarters. In this case the term runs from the date of arrival at a suitable place subject to deduction of any time spent in confinement (h).

A sentence of imprisonment requires an order from the Admiralty or the Commander-in-Chief or the officer ordering the court-martial, or the commanding officer if the sentence was imposed by him, before it is carried into execution (a); and any time spent in naval custody is reckoned towards its term (b).

(5) Detention (c) in buildings or vessels set apart as detention quarters for a term not exceeding two years. No officer is subject to detention (d). A sentence of less than fourteen days does not, but a longer sentence does, necessarily involve a stoppage of wages or pay (e). The term of detention is calculated in the same way and the requirements as to confirmation of the sentence are the same as in the case of imprisonment (f).

Appeals.

28. No provision is made in the naval penal code for appeals either on the law or on the facts from the findings of naval courts-martial. In practice the minutes of all courts-martial in which the accused does not plead guilty are referred to the Judge-Advocate of the Fleet for his report. On this report the Admiralty acts as it may be advised.

It is submitted, however, that there is an inherent right of appeal to the Crown (n).

The matter was referred to the judges and their report communicated to the Admiralty by Order in Council; see

SECT. 4.
Discipline.

The question of jurisdiction may, in many cases, be tested by an action for false imprisonment(o), or by application for a writ of habeas corpus (p); but it is submitted that no prohibition lies to a naval court-martial, for it ceases to exist as soon as sentence is pronounced (q).

No instance exists of a writ of certiorari being granted to bring up the sentence of a naval court-martial (r).

confinement :

29. The Admiralty has power to set apart buildings or vessels as naval prisons or naval detention quarters, and to exercise in their regard powers similar to those possessed by a Secretary of State over military prisons and detention barracks (s).

A naval offender sentenced to penal servitude is removed to an ordinary convict prison (t).

ment ;

A term of imprisonment may, however, be served either in a naval or military prison, or in naval detention quarters or in a common gaol or house of correction, according as the punishing authority directs, or as the Admiralty or Commander-in-Chief or senior officer on a foreign station from time to time appoints (a).

detention.

A person sentenced to detention, on the other hand, must undergo his punishment either in detention quarters or in detention barracks (b).

Within these limits the place of confinement may be varied from time to time by order in writing of the Admiralty or the Commander-in-Chief (c). The expense of any naval offender's confinement in or removal from any non-naval prison is met by an allowance from the Admiralty (d).

Discharge.

A person undergoing imprisonment or detention may be discharged by an order in writing by the Admiralty or Commander-in-Chief on a foreign station, and, if the punishment was imposed

SECT. 5.—Impressment.

30. The practice of compelling persons by force into the naval (g) service of the realm is called "impressment" (h). Justifiable only on grounds of public necessity, the power to impress, though now in abeyance (i), is part of the prerogative of the Crown (k). It is supported by the continued usage of centuries (l), by express judicial opinions (m), and by the implied sanction of numerous statutes and repeated decisions (n).

Impressment.

(f) Ibid., ss. 82, 83.

(g) The Crown exercised formerly a very wide power in compelling assistance in the defence of the realm. As to compulsory military service, see p. 38, post. The practice of impressment anciently extended to ships as well as men; see instances quoted in judgment in R. v. Broadfoot (1743), 18 State Tr. 1323; Laird Clowes, History of the Royal Navy, Vol. I., pp. 19, 112, 114, 118, 146; Maitland, Constitutional History, p. 280. Nor was compulsory service confined to the necessities of the defence of the realm; see Barrington, Observations on Statutes, 3rd ed., p. 302, note (u), where is set out a writ of Henry VI. for the taking of singing-boys.

(h) The word "impressment" originally connoted no idea of physical compulsion. Press money was given both to soldiers and to sailors on voluntary enlistment as the earnest of their contract to serve. It was the "King's Shilling"; see Maitland, Constitutional History, p. 461; 1 Hale, P. C. 677; Barrington, Observations on Statutes, 3rd ed., pp. 299 et seq.; and Oxford English Dictionary, "Impress." Pepys seems to have considered the giving of press money essential to the validity of a forcible taking (Diary, 1666, 30th June, 1st July, 2nd July; 1667, 27th February, 22nd August).

(i) The Royal Commission on Manning of the Navy, 1859, p. xi., declared it to be impracticable. The Crimean war was the first important war in which impressment was not employed.

SECT. 5.

Impressment.

Exemptions.

31. The power of impressment extends at common law over all persons of a seafaring character, whether employed on the sea or on navigable rivers (o).

From the general liability of all persons within this description a salt-water ferryman alone is excepted at common law (p). Statutory exemptions were, however, frequent. Created, most of them, in the interests of certain special trades (q), and suspended in times of emergency (r), these exemptions are now almost wholly swept away; but the Admiralty is still bound to issue protections to all persons under eighteen or over fifty-five years of age (s); to foreigners serving in merchant ships or privateers; to every person using the sea for two years from his first going to sea; to apprentices to the sea service for three years if they have not before used the sea (s); and to persons who have served in the Royal Navy, for two years if discharged by the Admiralty, for one year if discharged at their own request (t).

Method of impressment.

32. Impressment is carried out under warrant from the Admiralty grounded on an Order by the King in Council (a). The terms of the warrant must be strictly adhered to, and any

This seafaring character attaches to a ship's carpenter (Ex parte Boggin (1811), 13 East, 549), but not to mere shipwrights (Syme v. Napier (1780), 16 Mor. Dict. 6607). It is effaceable by a bond fide retirement from the sea (Nash v. Wyllie (1810), 15 Fac. Coll. 568), but not by the sole act of being bound apprentice to a trade on land (Turnbull v. Home (1793), 16 Mor. Dict. 6612). It does not attach, by an uncomplimentary exception, to gentlemen yachtsmen (R. v. Tubbs, supra). There is no exemption attaching to Lord Mayor's Watermen (R. v. Tubbs, supra), to freemen or liverymen (R. v. Young (1808), 9 East, 466), to freeholders (*R. v. Part II.—Reserve Naval Forces.

SECT. 1.—Royal Naval Reserve.

33. The Admiralty was authorised in 1859 (d) to raise and maintain and train a body of volunteers drawn from seamen (e) within or without the British Islands (f) as a reserve for the regular naval forces in time of emergency. There is no restriction on the size of the force so raised (g), now known as the Royal Naval Reserve (h).

Raising and maintenance.

Power is given to the Admiralty to make regulations as to the manner in which volunteers are entered to serve, the payment in consideration of entry, and as to service generally (i).

Regulations.

(d) Royal Naval Reserve (Volunteer) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 40), s. 1. This Act is, in the main, a re-enactment of the Naval Volunteers Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 73), authorising the raising of a volunteer force to be known as the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, and is the principal Statute for all the divisions of the naval reserves. The first mention of a naval reserve force is in 1696; see Laird Clowes, History of the Royal Navy, Vol. II., p. 237. Under the Naval Volunteers Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 73), a volunteer force of not more than ten thousand men, to be called the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, was authorised (ibid., s. 1). No force raised under this power exists. A coast volunteer was not while training to be sent more than fifty leagues from the United Kingdom, was to be called into actual service only in case of imminent danger or great emergency, and was to serve when so called out for one year only, extendible to two by Royal Proclamation. While a volunteer he was protected from service in the Navy, except when called out in national emergency, but was not eligible for admission to Greenwich Hospital. Regulations made under the Act by the Admiralty must be laid before both Houses of Parliament (ibid., ss. 3—5, 8, 11). See also p. 29, post.

(h) The title given by the Act was the Royal Naval Volunteers (Royal Naval Reserve (Volunteer) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 40), s. 1). The Royal Naval Reserve comprises also the Royal Fleet Reserve; see p. 23, post.

SECT. 1.

Royal Naval

Discipline.

All the laws and customs relating to the government of the Navy are applicable in like manner to volunteers, and officers having command over them, while training or on actual service (k), as well as to pensioners called out for actual service (l). Volunteers while training or on actual service are in the same position as regards billeting as the Royal Marines (m).

Service.

34. The volunteer enters for five years (n), but may be discharged at any time (o). His service entitles him to certain civil exemptions, and the privilege of eligibility, under Admiralty regulations, for admission to Greenwich Hospital (p).

Training.

35. Training and instruction, which may be on board ship or on shore, must not extend over more than twenty-eight days in any one year (q); and during these periods the volunteer is victualled in the same manner as seamen of the fleet, or, where trained on shore and not victualled, receives a money allowance in lieu of provisions (r).

Calling out
service.

36. The volunteers may be called into actual service, under Admiralty directions, "on such occasions as His Majesty shall deem fit." The occasion must be communicated to Parliament, or, if Parliament be not sitting, declared in Council and proclaimed (s). When so called out they are liable to serve on board ship or ashore for three years, and this period may on emergency be extended by Royal Proclamation to five years, at extra pay for any service beyond three years (t).

Pay and pensions.

37. While on actual service, whether ashore or afloat, they are in the same position as regards pay, allotment of wages, remittances, and other provisions relating to pay, as men of their respective ratings in the Royal Navy (u).

With the consent of the Treasury pensions may be granted under Admiralty regulations, but when conferred may be paid to the pensioner himself only (a). In time of emergency these pensioners may be required to serve in the Navy for so long as the emergency continues, and while so serving receive, besides their pensions, the pay and allowances of men of their ratings in the Royal Navy (b).

Shipping masters acting under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (c), have power to call for information concerning reserve men from masters and other persons on British merchant ships, and are bound, under penalty, to give such information and other assistance as the Admiralty or Board of Trade requires (d).

Royal Naval

Information as to reserve men.
Offences.
Wrongful
enlistment.

39. Any person enrolled as a volunteer of the Royal Naval Reserve, in this section referred to as a "volunteer," who enlists in the Regular Forces or the Militia or the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, or any person enrolled in the Militia or belonging to the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers who enters as a volunteer, commits an offence punishable with six months' imprisonment. The enlistment and entering respectively are null and void, and anyone enlisting or entering as a volunteer in such circumstances is liable to a fine (e).

A volunteer or a pensioner not appearing when required for actual service may be apprehended and punished as a deserter from the Royal Navy (f).

Failure to appear for service or training.

A volunteer not appearing for or improperly afterwards absenting himself from training after proper notice given is liable to a penalty not exceeding £20 (g), and any person inducing a volunteer to absent himself, or knowingly harbouring or employing a volunteer absenting himself from duty, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £30 (h).

Penalties are also imposed on the buying or selling of volunteers' arms, accoutrements, ammunition, slops or necessities; and provision is made for a search warrant to issue on suspicion, supported by oath, of unlawful possession thereof (i).

Sale of arms
etc.

Provision is made for the enforcement of these penalties by summary procedure, and for their apportionment where an informer is concerned (k).

Enforcement of penalties.

SECT. 2.—Royal Fleet Reserve.

40. A new division of the Royal Naval Reserve was authorised in 1900 (l), which received in 1903 the name "Royal Fleet Reserve" (m).

Who may join.

It is restricted to persons enlisted in the Royal Navy or Royal Marines on and after the 8th August, 1900, and holding pensions

service.

41. Members of the Royal Fleet Reserve are subject to the same provisions as ordinary Royal Naval Reservists (s), except that the term of service in the Royal Fleet Reserve is regulated by conditions attaching to pensions, enlistment or employment, as the case may be (t); and, in the case of Marine Reserves, the words "non-commissioned officers or men" are substituted for the words "petty officers or seamen in the Royal Navy," and whether being trained or on actual service they are in the same position as the Royal Marines (a).

Qualification.

42. His Majesty may accept as officers of reserve to the Royal Navy, masters, mates, or engineers from the merchant service or other British ships, retired commissioned officers, masters or engineers of the Indian Navy (b), or any other person on the recommendation of the Admiralty (c). They are enrolled and bear rank and receive such pay and allowances as the Admiralty directs, and when training or on actual service are subject to all laws, regulations and customs in force in the Royal Navy (d). If killed or wounded in action, they stand in the same position as regards pensions

SECT. 4.—Indian Marine Service.

43. The making of laws and regulations for the Indian Marine Service is in the hands of the Governor-General of India in Council (f), subject to the following restrictions:—The power to impose sentence of death on natural-born European subjects or their children cannot be given to any but the High Courts without the previous consent of the Secretary of State for India in Council (g); laws so made are applicable only to offences committed in Indian waters (h); the scale of punishments must be similar to, and may not exceed, those provided for like offences in the Naval Discipline Acts (i).

regulations.

Within these limits such laws have all the force of Acts of Parliament until repeal or notice given by the Governor-General of disallowance by the Crown (k).

Extent.

In time of war any vessel belonging to the Indian Marine Service may be placed by the Crown under the command of the senior naval officer of the station, and such a vessel becomes an integral part of the Royal Navy subject to the regulations made by the Board of Admiralty in conjunction with the Secretary of State for India in Council (l).

dealing with the term of service (r); the training and instruction (s); the extension of the period of actual service in emergency by proclamation (t); the imposition of a penalty for non-attendance at training (u); the rate of pay when in actual service (a); and the power of the Admiralty to make regulations as to the sums payable on entry or re-entry, and to grant pensions (b).

The Admiralty is empowered to make regulations for these purposes for the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, and in particular to adapt to this force the provisions in the Volunteer Act, 1863 (c), relating to the power to quit the corps when not in actual service, and to rules and property of the corps (d).

Imperial

Volunteers.

Voluntary
Navy.Provision under colonial local legislation.

46. The Colonial Naval Forces are of two kinds, according as to whether they are raised under the authority of the Imperial legislature or of the local legislatures. The former are regulated by the Colonial Naval Defence Acts (e).

Under these Acts (e) the colonies have power, with the approval of His Majesty in Council, to raise a volunteer force, which shall form part either of the Royal Naval Reserve or the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, according as the local legislatures may provide. In either case, except when offered for general service in the Royal Navy, these volunteers are subject to the exclusive control of the local legislatures (f).

The Admiralty may, however, accept the offer by the Government of a colony of all or any of such volunteers for general service in the Navy. To these volunteers the provisions of the Acts governing the Royal Naval Reserves and the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve respectively on actual service apply (g).

47. The colonies may also through their local legislatures, with the approval of His Majesty in Council, make provision for providing and maintaining vessels of war and seamen to serve in them, for appointing commissioned, warrant and other officers, and for enforcing order and discipline. The Admiralty may accept the offer of any vessel of war so provided with its officers and men, and when so accepted, ships, officers, and men to all intents become part of the Royal Navy (h).

SECT. 6.
Colonial Naval Forces.

A colony may also provide that seamen and others maintained under these powers, entered on the terms of being bound to serve in any vessel provided by the colony, shall also in emergency be bound to serve in the Royal Navy, and where the service of such men is offered to and accepted by the Admiralty under the authority of the King in Council, the men and officers so accepted become to all intents members of the Royal Navy (i).

Compulsory service in Navy.

Any statutory powers of the Admiralty under these provisions (k) may be delegated to any officer in the Royal Navy of the rank of captain or higher, and special commissions may also be issued to officers volunteering for service under these provisions (l).

Commissions.

No power vested in the colonial Governments is affected by these provisions, and no charge can be imposed on the Exchequer of the United Kingdom under them unless expressly so provided by Parliament (m).

Jurisdiction.

48. After much discussion on naval colonial defence at three colonial conferences (n) an agreement was arrived at in execution of which Australia and Canada were to commence the formation of their own navies. Provision is made for the raising of navies by the other self-governing Dominions (o).

The legal position of these semi-independent fleets presented, until recently, serious difficulty. This arose from the necessity of providing legal sanction for the maintenance of discipline therein outside the territorial waters of the colony, whether on the high seas or in a foreign port. The power of the colonial legislatures, limited as it is by the terms of their constitution Acts, to give this necessary sanction is extremely doubtful. With certain specified exceptions, power is, indeed, conferred upon them to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of the Dominions. But this power, unless expressly extended, is confined within the territorial limits of the Dominions (p). It was urged, however, that this general restriction of authority to these limits must be held inoperative, where its effect—as in the case of naval defence—is largely to nullify a power specially conferred (q).

This difficulty seems to be removed by the Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act, 1911 (r), under which, if provision is made by any self-governing Dominion (a) for applying the Naval Discipline Act (b) as at any time amended to its forces (c), it shall apply, subject to such modifications as may be made by law in the Dominion, to the forces and ships raised by the Dominion as if they were included in the expressions “His Majesty’s Navy” and “His Majesty’s ships” as they are used in the Naval Discipline Act (b).

In the event of a Dominion (a) placing its naval forces at the disposal of the Admiralty, the Naval Discipline Act (b) applies thereto without any modifications (d).

SECT. 7.—Coastguard.

Coastguard.

49. The Admiralty took over the then existing Coastguard service in 1856. From a date fixed by the Treasury it was empowered to exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges exercisable by any person whatsoever relating to the then existing Coastguard, and the raising and government and complete control of the Coastguard service passed into its hands (e).

Strength and privileges.

The Coastguard was restricted to 10,000 officers and men, and was given the benefit of all rights, privileges, immunities, and legal protection which belonged to previously existing Coastguards (f).

Acquisition of land.

All land and other property held or used for the existing Coastguard was vested in the Admiralty, and full powers given for the acquisition of land for Coastguard stations (g).

(q) Power is conferred on the legislatures of the three great self-governing Dominions to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Dominion with regard to naval defence: see, as to Australia, Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 12), s. 9 (the Constitution), s. 51 (vi.); as to Canada, British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3); as to South Africa, South Africa Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 59, though in this Act naval defence is not specifically mentioned.

(r) 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 47. The Act does not come into operation in relation to the forces of a self-governing Dominion unless or until provision to that effect is made in the Dominion (ibid., s. 1 (2)).

(a) That is to say, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, and Newfoundland (ibid., s. 1 (3)).

(b) 29 & 30 Vict. c. 109.

(c) Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 47), s. 1 (1). Such provision appears to have been made in Australia by the Naval Defence Act, 1910, No. 30 of 1910 (Commonwealth Act), and in Canada by the Naval Service Act, 1910 (9 & 10 Edw. 7, c. 43).

(d) Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 47), s. 1 (1). The officers’ names are placed in the Navy List for the purposes of seniority, and regulations have been made determining the relations inter se of the officers of the Royal Navy and of the Dominion naval forces.

In case of emergency, officers and men of the Coastguard and revenue cruisers and seamen riggers may be ordered to join the Royal Navy and to serve therein for not more than five years (h); naval pensioners may also be ordered to rejoin (i), and seafaring men employed in public departments may be ordered to join for not more than a year (k).

SECT. 7.
Coastguard.
Navy.

Whether thus called into actual service or not, officers and men of the Coastguard borne on the books of any of His Majesty's ships have the same privileges of making remittances or allotments of wages to relatives, and are subject to the same provisions as to pay and discharge, as officers and men of their respective ratings in the Royal Navy (l).

Privileges.

When called into service in the Royal Navy, officers and men of the Coastguard receive the same pay as their respective ratings in the Royal Navy (m).

Pay.

Service in the Coastguard counts for pension in the same way as service in the fleet (n).

Pension.

Coastguards, whether called into actual service or not, borne on the books of any vessel of war are subject to the same laws and customs as persons serving in the fleet (o).

An officer of the Coastguard authorised by the Admiralty has the same power of summary punishment over the petty officers and men of the Coastguard service on shore borne on a ship's books as the commanding officer of a vessel of war, but any order for imprisonment requires the written approval of the district Coastguard commander (p).

Discipline.

Coastguard officers may be put in command of and instruct and train the Royal Naval Coast Volunteers (q).

SECT. 1.
Command,

Maintenance and control.

 service.

Originally ordinary soldiers serving on board ship, they are now a separate military force specially raised for naval service (r). Their legal position, from the nature of the force and its functions, is anomalous. Their maintenance as a military force requires the annual sanction of Parliament (s), but the cost is charged in the naval estimates, and their government and control are entirely in the Admiralty's hands (t).

51. Enlistment (u) in the Royal Marines is for any term not exceeding twelve years (v). A marine within six months (w) of the end of his term or after its completion may be re-engaged (a), and even after a second term he may continue in the service if he wishes (b). If his term of service, whether under the original enlistment or on a re-engagement, expires while he is on a foreign station, it may be prolonged by his commanding officer for not more than two years (c), but at the end of that time, unless he wishes to continue in the service, he must be conveyed to England and there finally discharged (d). The expiry of the term of service of a (r) The first appearance of a force resembling the Royal Marines was in 1664. Regiments were frequently raised for sea service, while ordinary land regiments were also sent on board ship. The first real establishment of marines dates from 1755 (Clode, History of the Military Forces of the Crown, Vol. I., pp. 75, 264).

(s) Army Act, s. 190, includes the Royal Marines in the "regular forces" which need annual authorisation. Throughout this title references to the Army Act mean references to the Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), as re-enacted annually with amendments for a period of one year, by the Army (Annual) Act passed each year; see Army (Annual) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 5). The Army Act, when reprinted, is always to be printed with all amendments (Army (Annual) Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 8), s. 8 (2)), and it is in practice so reprinted every year. For the Army Act, as amended up to and including the amendments of 1909, see Butterworth's 20th Century Statutes, Vol. V., pp. 102 et seq.

(t) Army Act, s. 179. Moreover, in respect of the Royal Marines, the Admiralty exercises many functions exercised in the case of the ordinary land forces directly by the Crown (ibid., s. 179 (1), (3), (4), (6), (9), (11)).

(u) The term of enlistment and the general conditions of service in the Royal Marines are expressly removed from the purview of the Army Act (ibid., s. 179 (12)).

(v) Royal Marines Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 63), s. 1; Royal Marines Act, 1857 (20 Vict. c. 1), s. 1. Terms of enlistment or re-engagement are prescribed by the Admiralty (ibid., s. 1). As to men engaging to serve a part of their time in the Royal Fleet Reserve, see p. 23, ante; as to false statements on enlisting, see p. 9, ante; as to the commissioning and promotion of officers, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 21, 22; Stat. R. & O. 1913, Marines, No. 220.

(w) Or, where ordered on foreign service, within three years (Royal Marines Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 63), s. 4).

(a) Ibid., s. 3. The term of re-engagement, together with the first term, must not exceed twenty-one years (Royal Marines Act, 1857 (20 Vict. c. 1)), and he must previously make a declaration before a justice of the peace or some one with equal authority—a naval officer commanding a ship or the commanding officer of a battalion or detachment of the Royal Marines (Army Act, s. 179 (13); King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, art. 1174).

(b) Royal Marines Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 63), s. 5. But in all three cases above stated the approbation of his commanding officer is necessary.

non-commissioned officer or marine between the commission of an offence by him and trial does not affect his status as a marine for the purposes of his trial and punishment, but in such circumstances the trial must always be by naval, general, district, or garrison court-martial (e).

SECT. 1.
Command, Enlistment, and Services.

52. Any period of time during which a man (f) is absent from duty, whether because he is imprisoned under sentence of a court-martial or other authorised court, or is in confinement for debt, or by reason of his desertion, or absence without leave, is not reckoned as part of his term of service. Where a man is made prisoner of war, and a court-martial on inquiry finds he was made prisoner through his own wilful neglect, or that he has, or has not, returned to his duty as soon as possible, the court may direct that all or any of the time he was absent from his duty may be deducted from his term of service (g).

Absence.

53. Regulations made by a Secretary of State and the Admiralty may provide for the voluntary transfer of a man of the Royal Marines to another section of the regular forces, or vice versa, and a person so transferred is to be put as nearly as possible in the same position as if he had enlisted in the force to which he is transferred (h).

Transfers.

54. Persons in receipt of pensions for service as non-commissioned officers and men in the Royal Marines are liable to be called into actual service by the Admiralty in an emergency. Non-attendance, if so called upon, renders them liable to be treated as deserters. When serving they have the same status and pay as ordinary non-commissioned officers and men (i).

pensioners.

SECT. 2.—Discipline.

55. Officers and men of the Royal Marines are subject to naval or military law according to the circumstances of their service at any particular time.

Discipline.

When borne on the books (k) of any ship commissioned by His Majesty they are subject (l) to the Naval Discipline Act (m), and

SECT. 2. other laws and rules governing the Navy. But this general rule is subject to some modifications. Notwithstanding the fact that they are so borne, the Army Act (n) is applicable to any officer or man of the Royal Marines—

- (1) Found on shore as a deserter or absentee without leave (o);
- (2) Committing an offence punishable under the Army Act (n), but for which he is not amenable to a naval court-martial (p);
- (3) Committing an offence (q) on shore, even though amenable thereto to a naval court-martial, if the Admiralty so directs (r);
- (4) While employed on land, if the senior naval officer present so directs (s).

When not so borne on the books of a ship commissioned by the Crown, marines are subject to the ordinary military discipline of the rest of the land forces (t).

Courts-
martial.

56. Special provisions, however, are made for courts-martial on marines.

The Admiralty exercises in this regard, in the same manner and to the same extent, all powers exercisable by the Crown under the Army Act (n), whether by warrant or otherwise, of convening or authorising an officer to convene or delegate his power to convene, or of confirming the findings and sentences of courts-martial and generally in relation thereto (u).

A general court-martial for the trial of an officer or man in the Royal Marines can only be convened by an officer authorised by warrant from the Admiralty (a). Subject to the general power of confirmation by the Admiralty, the findings and sentences of a general or district court-martial on a marine may be confirmed either by an officer authorised to convene such a court-martial, or by an officer with the power of confirmation in the case of an ordinary member of the regular land forces (b).

When not made under such circumstances subject to military law, the power of awarding summary punishment (see p. 11, ante) may be exercised by the officer in immediate command of the marines so serving on shore. As to billeting the Royal Marines, see note (m), p. 54, post.

(u) Army Act, s. 179 (3), (4).

(a) Ibid., s. 179 (1). A marine serving beyond the seas with another portion of the regular forces may be tried by a general court-martial convened by the officer in command of those forces, provided (1) that this officer has power to convene general courts-martial; (2) that in his opinion there is not present an officer with the requisite authority from the Admiralty (ibid.).

(b) Ibid., s. 179 (5). As to courts-martial, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., pp. 97 et seq.; and see p. 11, ante.

57. When subject to naval law, marines are in all matters under the command of the captain, the executive officer, and the officer of the watch. In their distinctive duties as marines they are commanded by their own officers, but, when carrying out duties in conjunction with naval officers and men, the command depends on the relative ranks of the officers present (c).

SECT. 2.
Discipline.
Under naval law.

58. While on board ship, the men are employed as sentinels and generally perform all ship's duties, regard being paid to the duties for which they are embarked. They must not be employed as petty officers, nor are they obliged to go aloft (d).

On board ship.

SECT. 3.—Royal Marine Volunteers (e).

59. The Admiralty was given power in 1903 to raise and maintain a body of volunteers to be known as the Royal Marine Volunteers, and to make regulations for their enrolment (f).

Royal Marine Volunteers.

Royal Marine Volunteers are subject to the enactments in force relating to volunteers, the Admiralty being substituted for a Secretary of State in making regulations adapting them. When subject to military law they are in the same position as the Royal Marines, and whether training, afloat, or on actual service are available for service beyond the seas (g).

61. There is no statutory right to retired pay or pensions. Such right as there is depends upon the King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, which specifically declare that they are held only during good behaviour and are liable to forfeiture or suspension for any misconduct (k).

Besides the retired pay of officers and pensions to seamen, the Admiralty has the disposal of good service pensions, Naval and Greenwich Hospital pensions (l), Travers pensions (m), and pensions, gratuities, and compassionate allowances to the widows or other relatives of deceased officers or men (n). But neither officer nor man, nor a widow or other relative of an officer or man, has any right to these pensions, gratuities and allowances; they are awarded at the sole discretion of the Admiralty.

All pensions (o), bounty money, grants, or other allowances (p) are paid in such manner, and subject to such restrictions, conditions, and provisions, as are from time to time directed by Order in Council (q).

Any assignment, sale, or contract, made by an officer, seaman, or marine entitled to a naval pension, or by a person entitled to a pension as the widow of an officer, or by a person entitled to a compassionate allowance, or by a person entitled to marine half-pay of or in relation to such pension, allowance or half-pay, is void (r). Part of the pension of a person leaving a wife or family chargeable to a union or parish may be paid to the relief authorities by the order of two or more justices of the county or place where the union or parish is situate (c).

Its distribution, as well as the distribution of any other grant or reward, is provided for by the appointment of an agent for every ship of war in commission (i).

PART IV. Naval and Marine Pay, Pensions, and Prize Money.	The post of agent may be held by a partnership body, but not by anyone holding office or employment under the Crown, or by a proctor, attorney, or solicitor (a).
Appointment of agent.	The appointment, which must be by attested instrument registered at the Admiralty, signed by the commanding officer, remains unaffected by a change in that command, and makes the holder an officer under the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty (b). The agent is entitled to copies of official accounts, and is remunerated by a percentage on the net amount distributable.
Disputes and costs.	Disputes as to the distribution, or the investment which is authorised pending distribution, come within the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty (c). Before the distribution, the costs and expenses of officers and crew and agent and any other charges must be taxed and paid (d).
Authority for distribution.	The distribution, where not specially provided for by Act of Parliament, must be made under the direction of a royal proclamation or Order in Council, and instruments made in pursuance of such an order by, to, or upon anyone in the service of the Crown are exempt from stamp duty (e).
Forfeited and unclaimed shares.	Forfeited and unclaimed shares, together with a deduction of 5 per cent. on the proceeds of all prizes, on all grants to the Navy and Marines, and on all bounty money, and on any other money from which by law prior to 23rd June, 1864, a deduction was allowed, are carried to and form part of a naval prize cash balance (f).
Default of agent.	The rights of the officers and crew to take any step as salvors, seizers, captors or otherwise, in the default of the agent, is not affected (g). The rights and authority of the Crown are also saved, and power is given to make Orders in Council for the purposes of the Act (h).

Part V.—The Regular Army.

SECT. 1.—Command, Enlistment, and Services.

Definition of "regular forces."

66. The term "regular forces" is defined by the Army Act (i) as meaning officers and soldiers who by their commission, terms of enlistment or otherwise are liable to render continuously for a term military service in any part of the world. It includes the regular army commonly so called, the Royal Marines (k), the Indian Army (l), and the Royal Malta Artillery (m); also the reserve forces, when subject to military law (n).

67. The Indian Army, which is practically entirely composed of natives of India, is subject to the Indian military law contained in the Indian Articles of War (o).

The Colonial Forces consist of troops raised by the various Colonial Governments, and of troops raised and maintained under the authority of the Imperial Parliament for service in the Colonies (p).

68. The maintenance of a standing army within the realm in times of peace, without the consent of Parliament, was declared to be illegal by the Bill of Rights (q), and since then the regular forces have only continued to exist by virtue of the annual renewal of the sanction given by Parliament (r).

69. The government of the forces is vested in the Crown (s), who has power to make regulations as to command and administration (t).

The administration of the Army is confided by the Crown to the Army Council (a).

70. The constituent elements of the regular forces are fighting troops, services, and departments. The two former are divided into "corps," an expression which means any military body declared by Royal Warrant to be a corps, which is the unit for purposes of enlistment and service (b). The unit for purposes of discipline etc. is not necessarily the corps, and, like the term "commanding officer," is not capable of definition, its meaning depending upon the exigencies of any particular situation and the custom of the service (c).

Commissions.

71. Persons may join the regular forces either as officers (d) or as soldiers (e). Appointments to first commissions as officers are governed by the provisions of the Pay Warrant (f). Trafficking in commissions is an offence punishable on conviction, on indictment or information, by a fine of £100 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, and if committed by an officer entails dismissal on conviction by court-martial (g).

to resign.

An officer has no right to resign his commission (h), and if he considers himself wronged by his commanding officer and cannot obtain redress, his only remedy is to complain to the Army Council, whose duty it is to investigate the complaint and report to the Crown through the Secretary of State (i).

Enlistment.

72. Enlistment is the acceptance of an engagement in the military service of the Crown, and is in the nature of a contract between the person enlisted and the Crown (j). It follows, therefore, that the terms upon which a person enlists cannot be altered without his consent. Recruits are enlisted either for service with a particular corps of the regular forces (k) or for general service (l). In the latter case the recruit is to be appointed as soon as practicable to some corps of the regular forces (m). A person enlisted for service with or appointed to a particular corps serves in it for the period of his army service (n), unless, when enlisted for general service, he is transferred within three months to some other corps of the same branch or arm of the service (o). A man may be transferred with his own consent to any corps at any time (p), or by compulsion to any corps of the same branch or arm serving in the United Kingdom (q).

(b) The expression "corps" is defined by the Army Act, s. 190 (15). A soldier on enlistment is appointed to a corps and, unless transferred, serves in it for the whole period of his service. An officer is, on the other hand, liable to serve with any portion of the army. As to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante.

(d) The expression "officer" is defined by the Army Act, s. 190 (4). An alien may not be appointed to a commission (ibid., s. 95 (1)). An officer holds his position at the will of the Crown, and cannot bring an action for wrongful dismissal (Re Tufnell (1876), 3 Ch. D. 164; R. v. Secretary of State for War, [1891] 2 Q. B. 326, C. A.). The Army List is evidence of an officer's rank (Army Act, s. 163 (1) (d)). As to army chaplains, see title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., pp. 647, 648; and see ibid., pp. 443, 483, note (f).

Apprentices may be enlisted, but where the apprentice was bound when he was under the age of sixteen for at least four years by a regular indenture, and was under twenty-one at the date of his enlistment, the master may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for delivery up to him of the apprentice (a). The master may, however, elect to give up the indenture of his apprentice, and, where he

He may then apply to a court of summary jurisdiction, within whose jurisdiction the apprentice is, and the court, if satisfied of the master's right to claim the apprentice, may order the latter to be delivered up to the master by his commanding officer. If the commanding officer so requires, the court must try the apprentice for falsely stating on attestation that he was not an apprentice (ibid., s. 96 (2)). An apprentice may not be taken from the service except under an order of a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid., s. 96 (3)). does so within one month after the attestation of the apprentice, he is entitled to receive to his own use so much of the bounty, if any, payable to the apprentice on enlistment, as has not been paid to the latter before notice was given of his being an apprentice (b). Indentured labourers in a colony, if imported at the expense of the employer or the colony in consideration of the indenture, may be claimed under all circumstances (c).

service.

74. A person may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding twelve years, which is known as the term of his original enlistment (d). Such enlistment may be entirely for army service, that is with the colours, or partly for army service and partly for service in the reserve (e), and dates from the day of attestation (f) except in cases where a soldier has forfeited any part of his service (g).

Re-engage-
continuance.

75. A soldier in army service may, after the expiration of nine years from the date of his original enlistment, be re-engaged on the recommendation of his commanding officer and with the approval of the competent military authority, for such a further period of army service as will make up a total of twenty-one years (h). A soldier who has completed twenty-one years' service may, if he so desires and the competent military authority (i) approves, be continued as a soldier of the regular forces (k).

(c) Army Act, s. 97.

(d) Ibid., s. 76. As to re-engagement and continuance, see ibid., s. 84.

(e) Ibid., s. 77. The relative proportions of colour service and service in the reserve are varied from time to time as the exigencies of the service demand. The Army Council may allow a soldier to enter the reserve at once, or to extend his army service for all or any part of the unexpired residue of his term of enlistment, or to extend such term up to twelve years or any shorter period. A reservist may also be permitted to re-enter on army service for all or any part of the unexpired residue of his term of enlistment, or for any period not exceeding in the whole twelve years from his attestation (ibid., s. 78). For the definition of "reserve," see ibid., s. 101 (2).

(g) A soldier who has been guilty of desertion or fraudulent enlistment forfeits the whole of his service prior to conviction, and his period of service will date from the conviction, or, where he confesses the offence, from the order, if any, of the competent military authority dispensing with his trial. All or any part of the forfeited service may be restored by the Army Council (ibid., s. 79; and see King's Regulations, 1912, paragraph 273).

76. A soldier who is entitled to be discharged may have his service prolonged for a period not exceeding twelve months, if at the time a state of war exists, or such soldier is beyond the seas, or the reserve has been called out on permanent service (l). If a soldier is entitled to be transferred to the reserve at a time when a state of war exists, he may be detained in army service for a period not exceeding twelve months (m). In both the above cases the soldier entitled to discharge or to transfer to the reserve may agree to continue as a soldier of the regular forces on making the prescribed declaration before his commanding officer (n).

Similarly, in case of imminent national danger or of great emergency the Crown may by proclamation order that soldiers who would be entitled to be transferred to the reserve shall continue in army service (o). In such case the soldiers continued in army service are liable to serve in army service for the same period for which they might be required to serve if they had been transferred to the reserve and called out on permanent service (p).

77. A person who offers to enlist in the regular forces receives from the recruiter a notice informing him of the general conditions of the contract he is about to enter into, and directing him to appear before a justice of the peace for attestation (q). If he fails to appear, or on appearing declines to be enlisted, no further proceedings are to be taken (r). If he appears, the justice must ask him whether he has been served with and understands the notice and agrees to be enlisted, and the enlistment is not to be proceeded with if the recruit appears to the justice to be under the influence of liquor (s). If the recruit agrees to be enlisted he is to be cautioned against making a false answer, and the questions contained in the attestation paper are to be put to him and his answers recorded on the paper itself. Upon signing the declaration contained in the attestation paper and taking the oath of allegiance, the recruit becomes an enlisted soldier of the regular forces (t). It is to be noted that a person may also become subject to military law as a

Where a person has gone through the form of attestation, but the same is invalid, he cannot claim his discharge on that ground, unless he does so within three months from the date of the attestation (a). A person who has never been attested at all, but becomes a soldier of the regular forces by the mere fact of receiving pay, can at any time claim his discharge, but he remains a soldier of the regular forces for all purposes in the meantime (b).

ment.

78. Any person who without due authority publishes notices or advertisements for recruits, or opens or keeps recruiting offices, or receives recruits, or in any way interferes directly or indirectly with the recruiting service of the regular forces, is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £20 (c). A person who knowingly makes a false answer to any question contained in the attestation paper, which has been put to him by or by the direction of the justice before whom he appears for attestation, is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding three months (d). Where the attestation has been completed and the offender has consequently become a soldier of the regular forces, he may be proceeded against either before a court of summary jurisdiction or before a court-martial at the discretion of the competent military authority (e).

SECT. 2.—Discipline.

Military law.

79. It is one of the cardinal features of the law of England that a soldier does not by enlisting in the regular forces thereby cease to be a citizen, so as to deprive him of any of his rights or to exempt him from any of his liabilities under the ordinary law of the land (f). He does, however, in his capacity of a soldier, incur additional responsibilities, for he becomes subject at all times and in all circumstances to a code of military law contained in the Army Act, the King's Regulations and Orders for the Army, and Army Orders (g). ordinary law of the land, and must not be confused with so-called martial law, which is not law at all, but consists of regulations made by the military authorities in time of war for the purpose of securing the safety of the troops and maintaining order in cases where the ordinary courts of law have been compelled to suspend their functions (i).

SECT. 2.
Discipline.
Martial law.

80. The expression "persons subject to military law" includes all officers and soldiers of the regular forces, all civilians attached to or accompanying the regular forces when on active service (j), the Royal Marines when not borne on the books of any ship-of-war (k), the Indian and Colonial forces when attached to the regular forces in the United Kingdom (l), and under certain circumstances the auxiliary forces (m). The above persons may become subject to military law either as officers or as soldiers (n).

Persons subject to military law.

81. Where an offence under the Army Act has been committed by any person while subject to military law, the offender may be dealt with under the military code even though he has since the commission of the offence ceased to be subject to military law; provided that he is tried within three months of his ceasing to be subject to military law, excepting where he is charged with mutiny, desertion (m), or fraudulent enlistment (o). A person subject to military law who is sentenced by court-martial to penal servitude, imprisonment or detention and is discharged from the service, may be dealt with during the term of his sentence as if he continued to be subject to military law (p).

military law.

No one may be tried by court-martial for any offence committed more than three years before the date at which the trial begins, except in the cases of mutiny, desertion, and fraudulent enlistment (q); nor may anyone be tried twice by court-martial for the same offence (r).

Time limit for court-martial.

82. The term "military offences" includes all offences for which persons subject to military law may be tried and punished by the military courts. Most of these offences are of a purely military character, such as offences against military discipline and offences committed by one soldier against the property or person of another soldier (s), but the military courts may also try persons subject to military law for any offence which is a civil crime (t), subject to certain restrictions in the case of treason, murder, manslaughter, treason felony, or rape (a).

custody.

83. Every person subject to military law who is charged with an offence under the Army Act may be taken into military custody, that is, he may be put under arrest or in confinement (b). An officer may order any officer of inferior rank or any soldier, and a non-commissioned officer may order any soldier, into custody. An officer may also order his superior officer into custody if the latter is engaged in a quarrel, fray, or disorder (c). Officers or non-commissioned officers commanding guards, provost-m Marshals and assistant provost-m Marshals, must receive any person committed into their custody by any officer or non-commissioned officer. The officer or non-commissioned officer giving the prisoner into custody must within twenty-four hours sign and deliver to the person into whose custody the prisoner is given an account in writing of the offence with which the prisoner is charged (d). This charge must be investigated without delay (e).

martial.

84. Serious offences against military law are dealt with by court-martial. There are three descriptions (f) of court-martial—the regimental court-martial, the district court-martial, and the general court-martial, which do not differ in the extent of their jurisdiction, each having seisin of any military offence, but varying as regards their competence to try officers and as to the amount of punishment which each can award (g) and in their composition (h).

Summary
procedure.

85. Persons subject to military law who are charged with offences under the Army Act may, if they are soldiers, be dealt with summarily by their commanding officer. The latter has a discretion as to the exercise of this power, save that in the case of a charge for drunkenness he must deal with it summarily, unless the offender is a non-commissioned officer or the offence was committed on active service or duty, or after the offender was warned for duty, or is found unfit for duty by reason of drunkenness, or has been guilty of drunkenness on not less than four occasions in the preceding twelve months. The commanding officer's powers are limited to awarding twenty-eight days' detention, or, if on active service and the offender is not a non-commissioned officer, twenty-eight days' field punishment, and the fines, stoppages, and forfeiture of pay authorised by the Army Act. The offender may elect to be tried by district court-martial in every case where the commanding officer awards forfeiture of pay or anything more than a minor punishment (i).

86. The rules of evidence in proceedings before a court-martial are identical with those followed in the English civil courts (k), though the proof of certain official documents is facilitated (l). The conviction or acquittal of a prisoner by a civil court for the same offence is proved by production of the certificate of the clerk of such court or his deputy (m).

Evidence and procedure.

A conviction by court-martial can be proved by a copy of the original proceedings of the court-martial certified by the Judge-Advocate-General or his deputy, or the officer having the custody of the same, without any formal proof of their signatures (n).

The procedure of courts-martial is regulated by Rules of Procedure made by the Crown and signified under the hand of a Secretary of corps. Where the prisoner is an officer the members should be of equal or superior rank to him if possible (Rules of Procedure, 1907, r. 21 (B)), and, if the prisoner belongs to the auxiliary forces, one member of the court should always belong to the same branch of the service as the prisoner (ibid., r. 20 (B)). The officer convening the court, the prosecutor, a witness for the prosecution, the officer who investigated the charge, or the prisoner's commanding officer cannot sit on a court-martial save in the case of a field court-martial (Army Act, s. 50 (2), (3)). The president of the court is to be appointed by the convening officer (ibid., s. 47 (3)), and must not be below rank of captain, except in certain special circumstances; see ibid., s. 47 (4). The president of a district or general court-martial must, except in special circumstances, be a field officer (ibid., s. 48 (9)). When a warrant officer is being tried the president must not be below the rank of captain (ibid., s. 182 (4)). As to the composition and convening of courts-martial, see, further, title COURTS, Vol. IX., pp. 100, 101.

(i) Army Act, s. 46; King's Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 493—513. The minor punishments referred to are specified in ibid., paragraph 493. A non-commissioned officer cannot be dealt with summarily for drunkenness (Army Act, s. 183 (1)).

State (o). These rules must not contain anything inconsistent with the Army Act (p), and must be laid before Parliament as soon as practicable after they are made (q). A prisoner may be represented at a general or district court-martial by counsel (r), whose position is subject to the Rules of Procedure and to the Army Act, which contains provisions for dealing with counsel guilty of improper conduct or contempt of court (s).

The Rules also provide for the summoning of witnesses (t), who are given the same privileges from arrest on civil process as witnesses before a superior court of civil jurisdiction (a). Civilians who are guilty of contempt of court towards a court-martial may be dealt with by a civil court to whom the offence has been certified by the president of the court-martial (b), and if guilty of giving false evidence are liable on indictment or information to be convicted of and punished for perjury (c). Persons who are charged or prisoners who become insane can be dealt with as provided by the Army Act (d).

Punishments.

87. The Army Act lays down a scale of punishments for offences on conviction by court-martial ranging from death (e) to a reprimand in the case of an officer, and to forfeiture, fines, and stoppages in the case of a soldier (f).

(o) Army Act, s. 70 (1); as to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante. They will be judicially noticed (ibid., s. 70 (3)). Procedure is at present regulated by Rules of Procedure, 1907, reprinted with amendments, Stat. R. & O., 1912, No. 1905.

(e) The death sentence can only be awarded by a general court-martial, and requires the concurrence of two-thirds at least of the members of the court (Army Act, s. 48 (6), (8)), and in the case of a field court-martial the concurrence of all the members of the court (ibid., s. 49 (2)).

(f) Ibid., s. 44; King's Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 583—599. Punishments for civil crimes are regulated by the Army Act, s. 41. Sentences of penal servitude and of imprisonment or detention for more than twelve months must be carried out in the United Kingdom, unless the prisoner belongs to a class with respect to which the Secretary of State has declared transfer to the United Kingdom to be undesirable, either by reason of the climate or the place of birth or enlistment of the prisoner or otherwise (ibid., s. 131 (2); Army Order, No. 132 of 1907), or, in the case of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, if the court for special reasons otherwise orders (Army Act, s. 131); see General Regulations, October, 1881 (Manual of Military Law, 1907, p. 381). See also as to execution of sentence generally, Army Act, ss. 58—63, 131—135; King's Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 600—660. As to forfeiture and stoppages of pay, see note (p), p. 47, post. Punishment is not to be increased Soldiers on active service may also be awarded field punishment, which must be a punishment other than flogging, and not of a nature to cause injury to life or limb (g). A conviction and sentence by court-martial is not valid until confirmed by the proper authority (h), who may mitigate or remit or suspend the sentence (i). An acquittal needs no confirmation (k).

SECT. 2.
Discipline.

88. An officer who thinks himself wronged by his commanding officer, and who has applied for but not obtained the redress he considers himself entitled to, may complain to the Army Council. It is the duty of the Army Council to examine into the complaint and to report to the Crown thereon through a Secretary of State, in order to receive the directions of the Crown (l). A soldier who considers himself wronged by any officer other than his captain, or, by a soldier, must complain to his captain, or if he cannot obtain satisfaction, to his commanding officer, from whom an appeal lies to the prescribed general officer. Every officer so complained to must investigate the complaint, and, if satisfied of its justice, grant full redress to the complainant (m). Anonymous complaints are strictly forbidden (n).

SECT. 3.—Pay and Pensions.

89. The rates of pay and pension for officers and men are laid down by Royal Warrant (o). The pay of an officer or soldier of the regular forces must be paid without any deductions, other than those which are authorised by statute or Royal Warrant, or by any law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council (p).

(h) For the confirming authorities, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 104.

Deductions must not exceed such sum as will leave a soldier, after paying for his messing and washing, less than one penny a day (ibid., s. 138 (a)). The National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 46, provides for stoppages from pay for the purpose of providing soldiers with the benefits of the Act; see, generally, title WORK AND LABOUR. As regards stoppages from a soldier's pay for the maintenance of his wife or children, see p. 93, post; as to forfeiture, fines, and stoppages by way of punishment, see Army Act, ss. 44, 46. As to the Governor-General of India in Council, see title DEPENDENCIES AND COLONIES, Vol. X., p. 594.

SECT. 3.
Pay and Pensions.

Assignments of pay and pensions.

Disputes as to pay.

False oaths and persona-
tion.

Assignments of or agreements to assign pay or half-pay are void at common law and in equity (q).

90. Officers and soldiers, being servants of the Crown, hold their positions at and during the pleasure of the Crown, and consequently the civil courts have no power to intervene in any dispute relating to military pay or pensions (r).

91. Any person who wilfully makes any false statement, whether on oath or by statutory declaration, for the purpose of obtaining payment of any military reward, pension, or allowance, or any sum payable in respect of military service, or with respect to the payment of money or delivery of property in the possession of the military authorities, is liable to be punished for perjury (s). Any person who falsely represents himself to any military, naval, or civil authority as belonging to or being some particular man in the regular, reserve, or auxiliary forces is guilty of personation (a).

royal prerogative of purveyance, which was abolished in 1660 (c). It is now regulated by the provisions of the Army Act (d). The term "impressment" as used in this connection is somewhat misleading, as carriages and animals can only be forcibly seized when a state of emergency has been declared to exist (e). The power of impressment, like that of billeting, is confined to the civil authorities, and is put into operation by means of a justice's warrant. The extent of the power and the procedure to be adopted vary as the power is exercised in ordinary circumstances on production of a route, or by virtue of a requisition of emergency (f). A warrant of the justices is necessary in any event, but the power of impressment is much more extensive in the latter case.

SECT. 4.
Impressment of Carriages.

93. Every justice having jurisdiction in any place mentioned in a route (g) issued to the commanding officer of any portion of the regular forces (h) is required on production of the route, and on the demand of such commanding officer, to issue a warrant requiring any constable (i) having authority in such place to provide the carriages, animals, and drivers stated to be necessary for the purpose of moving the regimental baggage and stores of the forces in question (k). The warrant is to specify the number and description of the carriages, also the places from and to which they are to travel and the distances between such places, and is further to name a reasonable time within which they are to be provided (l). All persons having carriages and animals suitable for the purpose are to provide the same when ordered to do so by the constable to whom the warrant is issued (m). The local police authority (n) or the county association (o) is empowered to draw up an annual list

(f) The provisions of the Army Act relating to impressment of carriages do not extend to the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man (Army Act, s. 187 (1)). They apply, with certain modifications, to the auxiliary forces (ibid., s. 181).

(g) Ibid., s. 112. The route is conclusive evidence of the authority of the officer or non-commissioned officer producing it (ibid., s. 112 (3)). It is similar to the route issued for billeting purposes (ibid., s. 112 (2)).

(h) In the case of the auxiliary forces an order signed by the commanding officer of the unit in question is substituted for the route (ibid., s. 181 (4)); and see note (t), p. 54, post.

(i) Including a high constable, and a commissioner, inspector, or other officer of police (ibid., s. 190 (38)). The constable must observe the directions of the police authority (ibid., s. 120). Where there is no constable the duty of executing the warrant devolves on the justices (ibid.).

(k) Army Act, s. 112. Persons may only be carried under a requisition of emergency; and see note (t), p. 50, post.

(l) The fee payable to the clerk of the peace for the warrant is 1s. (Army Act, s. 112 (6)).

(m) Ibid., s. 112 (1). When sufficient carriages or animals cannot be procured within the jurisdiction of the justice granting the warrant, any justice having jurisdiction in the next adjoining place must supply the deficiency by a similar procedure (ibid., s. 112 (5)).

of persons liable to supply carriages and animals (p), and where such a list is in existence the justices may issue a warrant requiring a constable, as and when requested to do so by an officer or non-commissioned officer in pursuance of the Army Act, to provide orders for the necessary carriages and animals. Such orders are as far as possible to be made from the list in regular rotation (q).

Requisitions of emergency.

94. The Crown may issue an order distinctly stating that a case of emergency exists, and authorising any general or field officer commanding the regular forces in any military district or place in the United Kingdom to issue what is known as a requisition of emergency. This requisition recites the order and requires the justices to issue warrants for the provision, for purposes stated in the requisition, of carriages of every description, including motor cars and locomotives, horses (r) of every description, and vessels used for the transport of any commodities on any canal or navigable river (s). A justice of the peace, on demand by an officer of the portion of the forces of the Crown mentioned in the requisition, or a duly authorised officer of the Army Council, and on production of the requisition, must issue his warrant for the provision of the carriages, animals, or vessels stated by such officer to be necessary for the purpose specified in the requisition (t). This warrant is then executed by the constable in the same manner as when a warrant has been issued on production of a route, except that where a person ordered in pursuance of the warrant to furnish carriages, animals, or vessels neglects or refuses to do so, then, if a proclamation calling out the Reserve is in force or the Militia has been embodied, the carriages, animals, or vessels in question may be forcibly seized by the officer at whose instance the warrant has been issued (a). In similar circumstances, the order of the Crown authorising the issue of a requisition of emergency may provide for the purchase as well as the hire of carriages, animals, and vessels (b).

(p) The proper officer authorised by the authority preparing the list may at all reasonable times enter, for purposes of inspection, premises in which he has reason to believe that carriages or animals are kept. If he is obstructed a search warrant will issue (Army (Annual) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 3), s. 4 (2)).

(q) Army Act, s. 114; as to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante. Any person who is aggrieved by an entry in the list may complain to a court of summary jurisdiction, which may order the list to be amended (Army Act, s. 114 (2)). As to the effect of the list, see Sharratt v. Scotney, [1892] 2 Q. B. 479.

(r) The expression "horse" includes mules and all beasts used for burden or draught or for carrying persons (Army Act, s. 190 (40)).

(s) Ibid., s. 115 (1), (2). Canal, river, or lock tolls are not demandable for vessels so requisitioned, and any toll collector demanding or receiving tolls in contravention of the exemption is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 nor less than 10s. (ibid., s. 115 (5)).

(t) Ibid., s. 115 (3). The requisition is conclusive evidence of the authority of the officer to demand the carriages, animals, or vessels. It is also prima facie evidence of due issue and signature (ibid., s. 115 (6)). Officers, soldiers, and their families or servants may be conveyed on the carriages, animals, or vessels, as well as baggage, provisions, and military stores (ibid.).

The duty of furnishing the carriages, animals, and vessels necessary for mobilization purposes may be delegated by the Army Council to county associations established under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (c).

SECT. 4.
Impressment of Carriages.

Payment.

95. Payment for the carriages and animals impressed is to be at the rates and subject to the regulations mentioned in the Army Act (d). The Act provides for the increase of such rates by a reasonable amount, not exceeding one third of the rate, where an order to that effect is made by the court of general or quarter sessions having jurisdiction in the place in question (e). Any such increase must be notified in writing by the justice granting the warrant to the person demanding the same (f). Where the warrant is issued on production of a route, the officer or non-commissioned officer demanding the warrant is responsible for the payment of sums due to the owners or drivers of the impressed carriages or animals; and, if required, one third of the payment must be made before the carriage is loaded, and also, if required, in the presence of a constable or justice (g). Where the officer or non-commissioned officer is from any cause unable to pay the amount due, he must make up and sign an account with the owner or driver and transmit it to the Army Council, which must cause it to be paid forthwith (h). Where default is made in making any payment or in making up an account, or where an owner or driver of any impressed carriage, animal, or vessel has been ill-treated, the person aggrieved may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction, which, if satisfied on oath of the default or ill-treatment, must certify the amount due by way of compensation, including the costs of the application, to the Army Council, which must cause the amount to be paid forthwith (i). If the Army Council considers that the amount is not justly due or is excessive, it may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for the place where the certificate was granted for a rehearing (k). Where carriages, animals, or vessels are supplied in pursuance of a requisition of emergency, payment

(d) Army Act, Sched. III. A day's march must not exceed twenty-five miles, and the justices may allow additional compensation for every mile travelled over fifteen miles. Except in cases of pressing emergency, a carriage is not to be required to travel more than one day's march. The load must not exceed 30 cwt. in Great Britain, and must, if practicable, be weighed before being placed on the carriage.

(e) Ibid., s. 113 (2). The order must specify the average price of hay and oats at the nearest market town, and only remains in force for ten days, though it may be renewed from time to time (ibid., s. 113 (3)). must be made by the Army Council, and the determination of any dispute as to amount must be left to a county court judge (l). An owner whose carriages, animals, or vessels have been forcibly seized (m) is entitled to payment as though he had duly furnished them in compliance with the order (n).

96. The conveyance of the royal forces by rail is now regulated in ordinary circumstances by statutory provisions for the transport of troops and their luggage, and also of public baggage, stores, arms, and ammunition, at special rates, on production of a route (o). Railroads and the plant belonging to them may also be seized for the public service where there is an Order in Council declaring an emergency to have arisen, but full compensation must be paid to the owners of the line for any loss or injury caused by the seizure (p). Where an order for the embodiment of the Territorial Force is in force, traffic for naval and military purposes is given precedence by the National Defence Act, 1888 (q).

97. A constable who neglects or refuses to execute a warrant for impressment of carriages, animals, or vessels, or who receives, demands, or agrees for money or reward to excuse any person from being placed on a list as liable to furnish or from furnishing any carriage, animal, or vessel, or orders any carriage, animal, or vessel to be furnished for any person or purpose or on any occasion for and on which it is not required by the Army Act to be furnished, is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not less than 20s. nor more than £20 (r). A person who neglects or refuses to comply with an order for impressment, or who bribes a constable, officer, or non-commissioned officer for the purpose of obtaining relief from liability to impressment, or who obstructs the execution of a warrant or order for impressment, is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not less than 40s. nor more than £10 (s).

99. The following offences are punishable on summary conviction with imprisonment for not more than three months, with or without hard labour, or by a fine of not less than 20s. nor more than £5, namely :—forging or counterfeiting a route or requisition of emergency ; knowingly producing a forged route or requisition to a constable or justice ; personating an officer or soldier entitled to demand carriages, animals, or vessels ; producing to a justice or constable a route or requisition without authority, or producing a document falsely purporting to be a route or requisition (b).

100. Billeting consists in assigning quarters to officers, soldiers, and horses (c) by means of a billet or official order requiring the person to whom it is addressed to provide the necessary accommodation. The power of billeting is strictly confined to the civil authorities.

Definition.

101. The practice of billeting was declared to be illegal by the Petition of Right (d) and certain other statutes (e). These declarations of illegality still continue in force, although billeting is temporarily authorised from year to year within the limits laid down in the Army Act (f). The civil authorities are liable in damages to the injured party for any illegal or improper exercise of their billeting powers (g).

Nature and extent of billeting.

(t) These offences are :—wilfully demanding carriages, animals, or vessels not actually required ; failure to comply with regulations as to payment for carriages, animals, or vessels, and weighing of loads ; constraining any carriage, animal, or vessel to travel beyond the proper distance, or to carry an excessive load ; not discharging any carriage, animal, or vessel as speedily as practicable ; compelling the person in charge of any carriage, animal, or vessel to take any baggage, stores, or person not entitled to be carried ; ill-treating a person in charge of any carriage, animal, or vessel ; using any menace to or compulsion on a constable to make him provide any carriage, animal, or vessel which he is not bound to provide, or to dissuade him from the performance of his duty ; forcing any carriage, animal, or vessel from its owner (Army Act, s. 31). For the scale of punishments, see ibid., and ibid., s. 44.

(a) Ibid., s. 118. A conviction must be certified by the court to the Army Council (ibid.). The effect of this section and of ibid., s. 119, seems to be to prevent the court from dealing with the offences specified in the latter section except as therein mentioned. As to summary procedure, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 589 et seq.

102. All officers (h), soldiers (i), and horses (k) belonging to the regular forces (l) are entitled to be billeted, and the right also extends to horses belonging to officers of the regular forces in receipt of a forage allowance under the King's Regulations (m). The auxiliary forces (n), when subject to military law (o), are entitled to be billeted as though they were part of the regular forces (p).

103. A distinction must be drawn between the power of billeting troops in ordinary circumstances when no emergency exists and its exercise when directions have been given for the embodiment of all or any part of the Territorial Force (q).

In the former case troops are billeted on the production of a document, known as a route, signed by a Secretary of State and specifying the forces to be moved (r), or in the case of the auxiliary forces, when subject to military law (s), of an order issued and signed as a route, or an order signed by the officer commanding the unit in question (t).

When the Territorial Force is embodied the Crown may, by an order signed by a Secretary of State distinctly stating that a case of emergency exists, authorise any general or field officer commanding the regular forces (a) in any military district or place in the United Kingdom to issue a billeting requisition, which involves a more extensive power of billeting than a route (b).

104. Where billets are demanded in pursuance of a route, or order having the effect of a route, the power of billeting rests with the constable for the time being in charge at any place in the United Kingdom mentioned in the route or order (c). The constable's powers are restricted to an area within one mile from the place in which he has authority (d), though a justice may, on the request of a person entitled to demand billets, vary a route by adding or omitting any place, or may direct billets to be provided at a distance exceeding one mile (e). A justice may also call on the constable to account in writing for the exercise of his powers (f).

Where there is no constable the duties devolve on the justices (ibid., s. 120 (1)), but no justice holding a military office may act in billeting troops under his command (ibid., s. 120 (2)). For the definition of "constable," see ibid., s. 190 (38). The constable is to observe directions given to him by the police authority (ibid., s. 120 (1)).

A route purporting to be duly issued and signed is conclusive evidence of the right to demand billets (g), but is only to be acted on by the constable so far as there are effective officers, soldiers, or horses present (h).

Where the Territorial Force is embodied, and a billeting requisition takes the place of a route, it is incumbent on the chief officer of police (i) to provide the necessary billets. The provisions relating to billeting in pursuance of a route apply to billeting under a requisition (k), with certain important modifications dealt with hereafter (l).

105. Where billeting takes place in pursuance of a route or of an order equivalent to a route, private houses are entirely exempt (m); but troops may be billeted in any victualling house (n). Every keeper of a victualling house is liable to provide lodging and attendance for officers, lodging, attendance and food for soldiers, and stabling and forage for horses, on the scale laid down in the Act (o). The keeper of a victualling house who desires to be relieved from his liability can obtain relief by providing adequate accommodation elsewhere in the immediate neighbourhood to the approval of the billeting authorities (p). may make out an annual list of keepers of victualling houses liable to provide billets, which is to be open to inspection, and any person aggrieved may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction (r), which may amend the list (s). A keeper of a victualling house may also complain to a court of summary jurisdiction if he is aggrieved by having an undue proportion of officers, soldiers, or horses billeted on him (t).

requisition.

Where the billets are given in pursuance of a billeting requisition, when the Territorial Force is embodied, the liability extends to occupiers of all public buildings (a), dwelling-houses, warehouses, barns, and stables (b). The liabilities of such occupiers are co-extensive with those of keepers of victualling houses furnishing billets in pursuance of a route (c), but they are to be compensated by the Army Council for any damage done by officers or soldiers billeted on them (d).

Billet money.

106. The prices to be paid for billets are fixed each year by the Annual Army Act (e). Payments by persons billeted must be made before such person departs, and, if he remains longer than four days, at least once in every four days (f). Where owing to a sudden order to march, or for any other reason, it is impracticable to make such payment, the person billeted must make up an account with the person on whom he is billeted, and, after signing the same, transmit it to the Army Council, which must cause the amount in question to be paid forthwith (g).

Offences.

107. Offences against the law of billeting may be either offences by persons subject to military law (h), or offences by occupiers of premises on which persons or horses are billeted (i), or offences by billeting authorities (k), or offences by other persons (l).

(r) Defined by Army Act, s. 190 (35); as to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante. As to courts of summary jurisdiction generally, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 571 et seq.

(c) Ibid., s. 108A (3). The prices to be paid to occupiers of such premises, not being keepers of victualling houses, are to be in accordance with regulations made by the Army Council with the consent of the Treasury (ibid., s. 108A (3) (c)) and laid before both Houses of Parliament (ibid., s. 108A (4)). There is no power in this case given to the justices to vary the route or increase the billeting area (ibid., s. 108A (3) (d)).

(d) Ibid., s. 108A (6). In default of agreement the amount of compensation is to be determined by arbitration under the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49) (Army Act, s. 108A (6) (a)).

The following are offences in relation to billeting when committed by persons subject to military law:—ill-treatment by violence, extortion, or making disturbances in billets, of the occupier of a house in which any person or horse is billeted (m); failure to pay the just demands of any such occupier or make up and transmit an account of the same (n); wilfully demanding billets not actually required (o); taking or knowingly suffering to be taken money or reward for the purpose of relieving any person from his liability to have persons or horses billeted on him (p); using or offering any menace to or compulsion on a constable or other civil officer to induce him to give billets illegally, or to deter him from otherwise performing his duty in relation thereto (q); using or offering any menace to or compulsion on any person to induce him to receive without his consent any person or horse not duly billeted on him, or to furnish any accommodation which he is not required to furnish (r). An officer also commits an offence if he refuses or neglects to cause compensation to be made on complaint and proof of any ill-treatment by any officer or soldier under his command (s). Further, any officer illegally quartering or causing to be billeted any officer, soldier, or horse is guilty of a misdemeanour (t).

The offender is liable on conviction by court-martial, if an officer, to be cashiered, or, if a soldier, to suffer imprisonment, or in either case to such less punishment as may be awarded by the court (u). In addition, the offender is also liable on summary conviction by a civil court to a fine not exceeding £5 (v). The remedy for non-payment for billets and for ill-treatment is the same as in the case of non-payment for impressed carriages (w).

108. The following are offences when committed by occupiers of premises on which persons or horses are billeted:—refusing or neglecting to receive any such person or horse, or to furnish the requisite accommodation (x); bribing a constable to relieve him from liability to billets (y); giving or agreeing to give to any person billeted on him any money or reward in lieu of receiving any person or horse, or furnishing the requisite accommodation (a).

Part VI.—Reserve Forces.

SECT. 1.—Army Reserve.

Composition.

111. The Army Reserve is composed of two classes, the first consisting of men who have served in the regular forces and are liable, when called out on permanent service, to serve in the United Kingdom or elsewhere (i); and the Special Reserve (j); this class may be divided into two divisions for the purpose of constituting a supplementary reserve (k). The second class of the Army Reserve consists of Chelsea and Greenwich pensioners and men of the regular forces who have served for less than their original term of enlistment:

(h) Ibid., s. 121; see p. 53, ante.

(i) Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), s. 3. The first class Army Reserve is divided into three sections, A, B, and D. Section A consists of not more than 6,000 picked men (Reserve Forces and Militia Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 9), s. 1; Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 32 (2)), who must agree to the conditions of service in this section (see p. 60, post). After twelve months' service in this section, or by agreement two years (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 32 (2)), a man reverts to section B, which consists also of men transferred direct to that section from the regular forces. Section D consists of men who have completed the term of their original enlistment, and are enlisted or re-engaged for a further period of service in the reserve (see Army Reserve Regulations; King's Regulations, 1912, paragraph 364). As to the residence abroad of army reservists, see Reserve Forces Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 40); Reserve Forces Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 11). As to the pay of reservists, see Pay Warrant, 1909.

(k) There is no supplementary reserve at present.

they are only liable for service in the United Kingdom (l). There was also a militia reserve, which is now obsolete (m).

SECT. 1.
Army Reserve.

Reserve of Officers.

112. Officers who have retired from the regular forces are liable to be recalled to service in the regular or auxiliary forces at a time of national emergency subject to certain limits of age (n). Officers may also voluntarily join the Reserve of Officers (o), provided that they possess certain qualifications (p). Reserve officers must report themselves annually (q), and are compulsorily retired on attaining certain age limits (r). They are liable to be called to army service at home or abroad at a time of national emergency, and with their consent and the sanction of the Army Council they may be employed in army service at any time (s). The Indian Reserve of Officers is governed by Indian Regulations (t). Special provision is made for appointing officers of Army Medical Reserve (a).

113. Persons who possess efficient motor cars, and are willing to place their cars and their services as drivers at the disposal of the Army Council for six days in the year, may receive commissions in the Army Motor Reserve (b). They may be called to army service in time of national emergency (c), when they are required to give the Army Council the option of buying or hiring their cars at a price or rate to be assessed by a committee which must include officers of the Army Motor Reserve (d).

reserve (e), or they may be specially enlisted (f) or re-engaged for service in the reserve (g).

115. Men belonging to the Army Reserve may be called out for annual training in the United Kingdom, not exceeding in any one year twelve days or twenty drills (h); this training may be carried out with a body of the regular or auxiliary forces (i).

116. Reservists may be called out by a Secretary of State, or in Ireland by the Lord Lieutenant, for the purpose of assisting the civil power in the preservation of the public peace (k). They may also be called out on permanent service by proclamation in case of imminent national danger or great emergency, the occasion being first communicated to Parliament, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, the occasion being declared in Council and notified by proclamation (l). Parliament, if not sitting, must be summoned by proclamation to meet in ten days if it would not otherwise meet sooner (m).

Reservists belonging to section A of the first class Army Reserve are liable to be called out on permanent service during the period of their engagement in that section, if required for service outside the United Kingdom when warlike operations are in progress (n).

117. A reservist when called out must serve for as long as his services are required, but in no case may he be required to serve for a longer period than that of his unexpired term of service in the reserve, unless a state of war exists, in which event he can be required to serve for a further twelve months (o). A reservist when called out becomes for all purposes and in all respects a soldier of the regular forces (p).

Certain men having special qualifications (e.g., railway men and post office employees) may be enlisted for the regular forces and immediately transferred to the reserve under the provisions of the Reserve Forces Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 42). The provisions of the Army Act relating to the attestation of recruits are made applicable to the enlistment of men for the Army Reserve by the Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), s. 18.

They are when called out under this Act liable to serve for twelve months (ibid.), and this period may by agreement be extended to two years (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 32 (2)). If any other part of the Army Reserve is called out on permanent service, the liability of men serving in section A becomes merged in their liability to service as reservists.

118. Reservists who fail to attend when called out for annual training are to be dealt with as though guilty of the offence of absence without leave (q); and if they fail to attend when called out on permanent service, or in aid of the civil power, they are to be deemed guilty either of the offence of absence without leave or desertion, according to the circumstances (r). They may be tried either by court-martial or by a court of summary jurisdiction, and may in any case be taken into military custody (s). The punishment for these offences is to be that prescribed by the Army Act, where the offender is convicted by a court-martial (a), and in the case of a conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction is fixed at a fine of not less than 40s. and not more than £25, and, in default of payment, imprisonment for not less than seven days and not exceeding the maximum term allowed by law on default in payment of the fine (b). An offender may not be tried both by court-martial and a court of summary jurisdiction (c). Proceedings may be instituted against an offender even after the expiration of his term of reserve service, provided that they are commenced within two months of the time at which the offence becomes known to an officer having power to direct the offender to be tried, if the offender is apprehended at the time, or, if he is not apprehended at the time, within two months of his apprehension (d). The provisions of the Army Act relating to evidence are applicable to the trial of reservists (e).

Proceedings before courts of summary jurisdiction are regulated in accordance with the Army Act, ss. 166—168 (Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), s. 25 (2)). The Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), applies to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man for all purposes in relation to the arrest, trial, and punishment of offences under the Act (ibid., s. 25 (4)). Trial “by court-martial” includes summary proceedings before a commanding officer (ibid., s. 26 (3)).

Persons inducing reservists to desert or absent themselves, or aiding or abetting them to commit those offences, or harbouring them after those offences have been committed, are liable on conviction by a court of summary jurisdiction to a fine not exceeding £20 (g).

SECT. 2.—Special Reserve.

Enlistment.

120. Men who have not served in the regular forces may be enlisted into the first class of the Army Reserve as special reservists (h), and by orders and regulations under the Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (i), may be formed into regiments, battalions, or other military bodies, and into corps either alone or jointly with any other part of the forces, and may be appointed, transferred, or attached to any corps (j).

reserve.

121. Special reservists, as part of the first class of the Army Reserve (k), are liable to be called out in case of imminent national danger or of great emergency (l). Where a special reservist so agrees in writing, he is liable during the whole of his service in the Army Reserve, or during such part as he agrees, to be called out on permanent service without proclamation or communication to Parliament, and, if Parliament is not in session, without Parliament meeting, provided that not more than 4,000 men are liable at any one time to be so called out, and that they are not called out except when they are required for service outside the United Kingdom when warlike operations are in progress (m).

(g) Ibid., s. 17 (1). By ibid., s. 17 (2), the Army Act, s. 153, applies to these offences; as to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante. As to courts of summary jurisdiction, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 589 et seq.

(h) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 30 (1). The Crown has power to transfer by Order in Council battalions of the Militia to the Army Reserve, and officers and men so transferred with their consent form part of the reserve of officers and special reserve, respectively, as from the date specified in the order of transfer (ibid., s. 34). The order of transfer made under this section is dated the 9th April, 1908, and applies (ibid., art. 4) the provisions of the Reserve Forces Acts, 1882—1906, to the officers and men so transferred as far as they are applicable. A legacy to the officer commanding a militia unit is payable to the officer commanding the corresponding unit of the Army Reserve after such transfer (Re Donald, Moore v. Somerset, [1909] 2 Ch. 410).

(l) Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), s. 12; see p. 60, ante. The calling out of special reservists, when the Army Reserve is called out, may be suspended by proclamation (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 30 (5)). The service of a special reservist may be extended, when he becomes entitled to his discharge whilst called out on permanent service, provided that he has entered into an agreement in writing to that effect (ibid., s. 31).

(m) Ibid., s. 32 (1). An agreement under this provision may provide for its revocation upon notice being given in writing (ibid.). Any exercise of the power given by this provision must be reported to Parliament as soon as may be (ibid.). The number of men for the time being called out under this provision must not (ibid.) be reckoned in the numbers of the forces authorised by the Army (Annual) Act.

122. A special reservist may, in addition to being called out for annual training, be called out for a special course or courses of training for a period not exceeding six months, and may during any such course be attached to or trained with any body of His Majesty's forces (n), subject, as to both special or annual training, to any limitations as to such period contained in his attestation paper (o).

Part VII.—The Territorial Force.

SECT. 1.—Organisation.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

123. The Crown may raise and maintain a force called the Territorial Force (p), any part of which is liable to serve in any part of the United Kingdom, but may not without its consent be carried or ordered to go out of the United Kingdom (q).

Raising and maintenance.

Under the hand of a Secretary of State the Crown may make, vary, or revoke orders, and subject to such orders the Army Council may make, vary, or revoke general or special regulations as to the government, discipline, pay and allowances, or any other matters relating to the Territorial Force, and its formation into corps or other military bodies, either alone or jointly with any other part of the forces of the Crown (a). The regulations are the sole authority for the matters with which they deal (b).

Regulations.

(n) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 30 (2). The annual training of special reservists is not limited by the provisions of the Reserve Forces Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 48), s. 11 (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 30 (3)); see p. 60, ante.

(o) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 30 (4).

(p) Ibid., s. 6. The strength of the force is to be fixed by Parliament from time to time (ibid.).

(q) Ibid., s. 13 (1). By ibid., s. 40 (2), the Act is applied to the Isle of Man as if it formed part of the United Kingdom, subject to certain modifications; see note (h), p. 73, note (n), p. 74, p. 82, note (i), p. 83, post. The Isle of Man Volunteers are still subject to the provisions of the Volunteer Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 65). As to voluntary service outside the United Kingdom, see p. 80, post.

(a) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), ss. 7 (1) —(3), 4 (1) (e), 37 (2). All orders and general regulations must be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after they are made (ibid., s. 7 (7)). The orders and regulations may provide for the constitution of a permanent staff, including adjutants and staff-serjeants, who must, except in special circumstances certified by the general officer commanding, be members of the regular forces. The expressions "regular forces" and "corps" are defined in the Army Act, s. 190 (8), (15) (b), applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 38.

(b) Order by His Majesty, Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, p. 11. The Army Council is the sole administrator and interpreter of the regulations, and may vary them in any matter not affecting the rates and quantities laid down, until a subsequent order is made by His Majesty. The regulations contained in Part I. of the Regulations relating to the Territorial Force and to County Associations (subsequently referred to as Territorial Force Regulations, 1912) are declared to be orders made by His Majesty (Order by His Majesty, Territorial Force Regulations, 1912,

(1) To be transferred from one corps to another (e);

(2) When not embodied to be posted to any unit (f) other than that to which he was posted on enlistment;

(3) To be posted to any part of the regular forces, if included in his corps;

(4) If serving at the time at which the order or regulation is made, to be allocated to any military body to which he could not previously have been allocated without his consent (g).

Application of Army Act.

125. The Army Act (h) applies to the Territorial Force in the same manner as it applied to the Militia (i). The Crown may also by Order in Council apply, with the necessary adaptations, to the Territorial Force any enactment relating to the Militia, Yeomanry and Volunteers other than those concerning the raising, service, pay, discipline, or government of those forces (k).

Precedence.

126. The Territorial Force takes precedence immediately after the Special Reserve (l). The precedence of the different arms is laid down in the King's Regulations (m). The precedence of units within the different arms is governed by the precedence of counties as shown in the Army List (n).

(k) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 28 (3). Such an Order in Council must be laid before both Houses of Parliament within forty days after it is made, if Parliament is then sitting, or, if not, within forty days after the commencement of the next session. If within the next subsequent forty days an address is presented to the Crown by either House praying that the Order may be annulled, the Crown may annul it, and the Order is thenceforth void, but any proceedings meantime taken under it remain valid (ibid., s. 37 (1)). - (3) The candidate fulfils the conditions as to age, physical fitness, and educational qualifications required by the regulations (q).

In other respects officers of the Territorial Force are commissioned in the same way as officers of the regular forces (r).

128. Promotion is generally governed by establishment and given to qualified officers according to regimental seniority, but this rule may be departed from in the interests of particular units (s). To qualify for promotion officers must pass the prescribed examinations and undergo certain obligatory courses of instruction (t). Provision is also made for brevet promotion (u). Command may be given to regular officers over the Territorial Force or to officers of the Territorial Force over the regular forces, provided that it is not given to a person over a person superior in rank to himself (v). Recruiting for the Territorial Force is carried out under the authority of the county associations, assisted by the adjutants and permanent staff of the units concerned, and by the officers in charge of recruiting for the regular forces within each area (w). The primary military examination, attestation, and final approval are the same as those for recruits for the Regular Army (x). Attestation may be carried out by any lieutenant or deputy-lieutenant of a county in the United Kingdom, or by an officer of the Regular Army, or Territorial Force, or by a justice of the peace (y).

Enlistment.

130. Every man who enlists into the Territorial Force must be—

(1) Enlisted for a "county," that is an area for which an association has been established (a);

(2) Enlisted to serve for not more than four years;

(3) Appointed to serve in such corps for the county as he may select, and be posted to such unit in that corps as he may select.

After enlistment he remains subject to the statutory and other prescribed conditions of service in the Territorial Force until duly discharged (b).

(w) For recruiting and enlistment generally, see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 126—143H. Subject to the provisions of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), Part I., the manner and conditions of enlistment are left to be determined by regulation (ibid., s. 9 (1)).

(x) Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 134—140. Recruits must possess the physical qualifications required by regulations, and on enlistment must pass a medical examination (ibid., paragraphs 47, 129, 133): the standards of measurement are laid down in ibid., Appendix IV. They may be required to give the name of some person of respectability from whom a personal reference can be obtained (ibid., paragraph 132). The age for enlistment or re-enlistment is from seventeen to thirty-five years (ibid., paragraph 129), or, in the case of men discharged from the regular army, with no liability for further service, up to thirty-eight years (ibid., paragraph 143B); the ages of enlistment of boys, bandsmen, clerks, and certain technical branches are governed by special regulations; see ibid., paragraphs 75A, 143A, 143D, 143G, 143H. The provisions of the Army Act, ss. 80, 99, 101, 163 (see note (s), p. 30, ante), relating to the mode of enlistment and attestation, the validity of attestation, enlistment or re-engagement, and the admissibility in evidence of an attestation paper or copy thereof, or a declaration are, with the necessary modifications, applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 10 (1); see pp. 41, 42, ante. In the case of the Territorial Force one attestation paper only is prepared (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 134). Particulars of former service in the forces of the Crown must always be declared (ibid., paragraph 142); and see p. 67, post.

(y) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 10 (2); Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 138. The sections of the Army Act applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1910 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 10 (1) (see note (x), supra), and also the Army Act, s. 33, are to be construed as if a justice of the peace in those sections included a lieutenant, deputy-lieutenant, or officer.

(b) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 9 (1), (2); Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 130. For a definition of "unit," see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, p. 8. For the method of numbering, see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 146. For the conditions under which transfer may be effected, see ibid., paragraph 154, and p. 64, ante.

(4) Foreigners;

(5) Men in receipt of disability pensions from army funds (c).

(c) Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 136. This provision is subject to the exception that men who have been discharged from the Army, Army or Special Reserve, Militia, Imperial Yeomanry, or the Territorial Force, as medically unfit, but are pronounced by the medical authority (having complete knowledge of the cause of discharge) to be fully fit for service in the Territorial Force, may be enlisted, provided that their character on discharge was at least "fair" (ibid., paragraph 137).

(d) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 9 (1) (c). The term of re-engagement is for one, two, three or four years, as each county association may decide (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 139, 141, 142, 165). The provisions of the Army Act as to the validity of enlistment and re-engagement are applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 10 (1).

(e) Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 136A.

(f) Enrolment in the Royal Naval Reserve is not included (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 144).

(g) Ibid., paragraphs 144, 145. As to service in the Special Reserve, see Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), ss. 30, 36; see pp. 62, 63, ante. Men enlisting into the Special Reserve of the Royal Engineers (category b), Army Service Corps (category b), Royal Army Medical Corps (category b), or Army Post Office Corps are, while so serving, supernumerary to the Territorial Force until their service in the Territorial Force has expired. All other men so enlisting into the Royal Navy, Regular Army, Royal Marines, Irish Horse, and parts of the Special Reserve not set out above are, on completion of the attestation form by the attesting officer, deemed to be discharged from the Territorial Force, but are liable to deliver up in good order, fair wear and tear excepted, all public property issued to them (ibid., paragraphs 144, 145). No payment is due to a county association from men leaving the Territorial Force to enlist into the Royal Navy, Regular Army, Royal Marines or Special Reserve (category a) (ibid., paragraph 802; and see note (i), p. 68, post).

SECT. 1.
Organisation.

If a man enlists into the Army Reserve without being discharged from the Territorial Force, the conditions of his service while he remains in the Army Reserve are those applicable to the Army Reserve and not to the Territorial Force (h).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Men : Discharge.

Discharge.

134. A man of the Territorial Force has a right to be discharged at any time before the completion of his term of service, provided that no proclamation calling out the Army Reserve on permanent service is in force, and provided that he gives to his commanding officer three months' notice in writing, or less if so prescribed, pays to his county association £5, or less if so prescribed, and delivers up in good order, fair wear and tear excepted, all public property issued to him, or, when from good cause delivery is impossible, pays the value of the same.

All or any of these conditions may be dispensed with by a county association, or an officer authorised by them, in any case in which it appears that the reasons for claiming discharge are of sufficient weight (i).

If, when a man would otherwise be entitled to his discharge, a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service is in force, he may be required to prolong his service for a further period not exceeding one year (k).

Grounds of discharge.

A man may be discharged from the Territorial Force (l) on the ground of (1) unsatisfactory conduct (m); (2) having made a false answer on attestation (n); (3) medical unfitness (o); (4) inefficiency (p); (5) or on the ground of his services being no longer required (q).

Discharge may also be claimed by (1) reason of irregularity of enlistment (r); (2) on the application of the master on the ground

(i) Ibid., s. 9 (3). Associations must, subject to the approval of the Army Council, frame scales of payment to be made by men in such cases, the payments to vary with the length of service uncompleted on the current engagement; no payment is due from a non-commissioned officer or man appointed directly from the ranks to a commission in the Territorial Force (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 802); see, further, note (g), p. 67, ante.

(k) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 9 (5). The period is to be determined by the competent military authority as defined by the Army Act, s. 101, applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 10 (1). As to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Training.

135. Every man of the Territorial Force must during the first year of his enlistment attend the drills and fulfil the conditions prescribed by orders or regulations for a recruit of his arm or branch of the service (u). If so provided by Order in Council, he must further attend for training at such places in the United Kingdom and at such times and for such periods, not exceeding in the aggregate the number of days specified in the Order in Council, as may be prescribed by regulations (v). Preliminary training.

136. Every man of the Territorial Force is liable by way of annual training to be called out at such times and at such places in the United Kingdom as may be fixed by orders or regulations, and further to attend the drills and fulfil the other conditions relating to training prescribed for his arm or branch of the service. These requirements may be dispensed with either wholly or in part as regards any unit or individual man by the prescribed authority (a). Annual training is additional to preliminary training and to the performance of voluntary duty or attendance at courses of instruction (b). The period of annual training is not less than eight nor more than fifteen, or in the case of the mounted branch eighteen, days in each year (c). The period, however, may by Order in Council be extended to not more than thirty days, or Annual training.

(v) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 14 (1). The draft of the Order in Council must be laid before both Houses of Parliament for not less than forty days during session, and if either House presents an address to His Majesty against the whole or part of the draft it becomes inoperative, but without prejudice to the making of a new draft order (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 16). No such Order has yet been made.

(a) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 15 (1). Annual training consists of three parts—drills, musketry, and training in camp. The primary authority for granting leave is the officer commanding the unit. The legal obligation applies to each calendar year during the period of engagement, if the dates fixed for annual training fall within the period of engagement. For general instructions as to annual training, see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 318—353, and for the training of the different arms, see ibid., Appendix VII. For regulations as to leave of absence, see ibid., paragraphs 393—400. As to failure to fulfil the conditions, see p. 77, post; for inspection of units, see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 354—358, 362, 716.

(b) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 15 (2), (3).

(c) Ibid., s. 15 (1). This elastic period is adopted by regulation (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 217, 340). As to the periods of training of medical officers attached to units, and of the Army Veterinary Corps, see ibid., paragraphs 65, 75c, 341, 342.

reduced, or dispensed with, for all or any part of the Territorial Force (d).

137. Personal notice to attend the annual training in camp is sent by post so as to reach the residence of each officer and man at least fourteen days before the date of assembly. Public notices are at the same time sent to the constabulary and police in the United Kingdom and to the inspectors of poor in Scotland, who must affix a copy without delay in each parish in places where Government notices are usually affixed. Such public notice is deemed sufficient notice, notwithstanding failure in the transmission or receipt of the personal notice; and any man not appearing at the time and place appointed in the public notice is liable to be proceeded against as an absentee (e).

Embodiment.

138. On the issue of a proclamation ordering the Army Reserve to be called out on permanent service (f), the Crown may immediately order the Army Council to give directions (g) for the embodiment of all or part of the Territorial Force. When directions have been issued for calling out the whole of the first class of the Army Reserve, the Army Council must within one month issue directions for embodying the whole of the Territorial Force, unless both Houses of Parliament present to the Crown an address against embodiment. If Parliament is adjourned or prorogued in such circumstances that it will not meet within ten days, it must be summoned by proclamation to meet within ten days. Only in case of emergency may the directions for embodiment be given before Parliament has had an opportunity of presenting an address (h). When directions have been issued for the embodiment of any part of the Territorial Force, every officer and man belonging to that part must attend at the time and place fixed in the directions, and after that time is deemed to be embodied (i).

(d) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 15 (2). Such an Order in Council is subject to the provisions of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 16; see note (i), p. 69, ante. No such Order has yet been made.

(e) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), ss. 19, 40 (1) (d); Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 270, 352. For the form of public notice, see ibid., Appendix XXI. A constable or inspector of poor who fails to conform to the regulations as to publication and service of notices is liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding £20 (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 19). As to summary procedure, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 589 et seq. As to failure to appear, see p. 77, post.

(g) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 17 (1). The directions may be revoked or varied; special arrangements may be made with regard to units or individuals whose services are required in other than a military capacity (ibid.).

(i) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 17 (3). As to failure to attend, see p. 77, post.

139. The Crown may by proclamation order the disembodiment of the Territorial Force, and the Army Council must then give directions for carrying the proclamation into effect. Until the issue of such a proclamation the Army Council may from time to time, as it thinks expedient, give directions for disembodiment of any embodied part of the Territorial Force, or for embodying any part not embodied, whether previously disembodied or not. After the date fixed by the directions for the disembodiment of any part, the officers and men of that part are no longer deemed to be embodied (k).

SECT. 1.
Organisation.
Disembodi-
ment.

140. During any authorised training or on embodiment officers and men of the Territorial Force are entitled to impress transport for baggage and stores, and to be billeted with their horses in the same manner and under the same conditions as the regular forces (l).

Impressment
and billeting.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Pay and Allowances.

141. Pay and allowances are granted to officers and men of the Territorial Force for attendance at specified duties, including annual training in camp, obligatory courses of instruction, and, if approved by the general officer commanding in chief, staff rides, instructional tours, and voluntary courses of instruction. The rates and conditions are those laid down in the Pay Warrant and Allowance Regulations for officers and men of the corresponding rank and arm of the regular forces, subject to certain variations. The performance of the prescribed number of drills is a condition precedent to the issue of pay and allowances during camp, but exceptions may be made by the general officer commanding in chief for sickness or other extraordinary cause (m).

allowances.

On embodiment the emoluments of members of the Territorial Force are governed by the Pay Warrant and Allowance Regulations, (l) The provisions of the Army Act dealing with impressment (ss. 31, 112—121, 181 (3), (4)) and billeting (ss. 30, 102—111, 181 (3), (4)) are applied to the Territorial Force by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 28 (1). For the effect of these sections, see pp. 48 et seq., ante. For allowances and issue of rations and forage to units when billeted, see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 579. As to the Army Act, see note (s), p. 30, ante.

See as to personal emoluments generally, ibid., paragraphs 551—678; pay and allowances of permanent staff, paragraphs 555—570, 809, 810; divisional and brigade headquarters, paragraphs 571—575, 576E; regimental officers and men, paragraphs 576—603; outfit grants, paragraphs 604—610; chaplains, paragraphs 619—623; travelling expenses, paragraphs 627—655; hospital treatment, medical and funeral expenses, paragraphs 656—669. Separation allowance is granted to all married non-commissioned officers for the periods for which they draw pay for annual training in camp and at authorised courses of instruction, and during annual training to all private soldiers, provided that they attend for the full period (ibid., paragraph 600). The payment of members of permanent staffs appointed as instructors prior to September, 1910, is governed by the Territorial Force Regulations, 1910, paragraphs 809, 810 (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 809 (note)). As to the Imperial and Special Service sections see pp. 80, 81, post.

SECT. 1. Organisa- tion.	and conform in all respects to those of the regular forces. Separation allowance is granted to the wives and families of all married non-commissioned officers and men (n). A gratuity of £5 5s. is issued to each officer and man who joins his unit on embodiment subject to the fulfilment of certain conditions (o).
Period of limitation.	Any pecuniary advantages granted by regulation to a member of the Territorial Force, if unclaimed within a period of twelve months, are deemed to be forfeited, except in special circumstances approved by the Army Council or an officer authorised by it. Pay and all other emoluments granted by regulations are liable to be stopped by order of the Army Council to meet any outstanding public claims, regimental debt, or regimental claim of which the Army Council may direct payment (p).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Discipline.

Subjection to military law.	142. Officers of the Territorial Force are at all times subject to military law, and may sit on courts-martial for the trial of members of the regular forces as well as of the Territorial Force (q). Non-commissioned officers and men are subject to military law when being trained or exercised (r), either alone or with any portion of the regular forces or otherwise; when attached to or acting with or as part of the regular forces; when embodied; and when called out for actual military service for purposes of defence in pursuance of any agreement (s).

Orders.	143. Any power vested in the holder of any military office may in relation to the Territorial Force be exercised by any other person for the time being authorised according to the custom of the service. Orders authorised under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (t), Part II., to be made by a military authority may be signified by an order, instruction, or letter under the hand of any officer authorised in that behalf; and any order, instruction or letter, purporting to be signed on behalf of such military authority is evidence that the officer who signed it was so authorised (u).

SECT. 1.
Organisation.

Acquaintance with and
of orders.

144. Officers must at all times make themselves acquainted with regulations and orders (a); ignorance of a published order is not admitted as an excuse for its non-observance (b). A commanding officer must cause all orders issued for general information to be re-published or circulated to those in the unit whom it may concern. He must also afford facilities to the officers under his command to become acquainted with changes in orders and regulations (c). During training in camp, orders specially relating to non-commissioned officers and men must be read and explained to them immediately on receipt (b).

145. Personal appeals by officers must be submitted through the commanding officer, or, in cases of his refusal or unreasonable delay, through his next superior (d). An appeal by an officer against a decision of a county association must be addressed to that association. If the association does not accede, the officer may request them to submit the appeal to the Army Council. If the association refuses or unreasonably delays to forward the appeal, the officer may address the Army Council through the usual military channel, but must at the same time inform the Association of his action (e).

officers.

146. During training in camp, all applications and complaints by men must be made through the squadron, battery, or company commanders; if they are unable to settle the complaint, the commanding officer will submit it to the inspecting officer for his decision (f). During embodiment, the procedure to be followed is that laid down for the regular army (g). At all other times applications and complaints must be made through the company commander or adjutant to the officer commanding the unit (f).

Complaints
by men.

147. Any member of the Territorial Force who is qualified and wishes to vote at an election is granted leave of absence from training for the purpose, and is not liable to any penalty or punishment for his absence during the time he is voting or going to or returning from voting (h).

and assembly

(d) Ibid., paragraph 276. The provisions of the Army Act, s. 42, and of the King's Regulations, 1912, paragraph 439, must be observed. In no case may testimonials as to services or character be forwarded to the War Office (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 234).

SECT. 1.
Organisa-
tion.

No commanding officer may assemble his unit in any electoral district during the period from the issue of the writ to the termination of the election. Exceptions may be made by a general officer commanding in chief in certain cases, including camps or annual training, but in this event the members of the Territorial Force must be kept within limits which preclude the possibility of their interference in the election (i).

Political meetings.

Members of the Territorial Force may not attend political gatherings in uniform, or discuss political questions at military gatherings, whether in uniform or not. Military bands are prohibited from playing at political gatherings. No assembly of soldiers may be sanctioned for a day on which through local circumstances it might be made to serve party purposes (k).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Offences, Courts-martial, and Procedure.

Jurisdiction
over officers.

148. The following offences are cognizable either by court-martial or by a court of summary jurisdiction: certain offences connected with enlistment (l); failure to attend on embodiment without leave lawfully granted or reasonable excuse (m); and offences cognizable by court-martial under the Army Act, if committed by members of the Territorial Force when not embodied (n).

The following offences are cognizable by a court of summary jurisdiction only: failure, without leave lawfully granted or (n) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), ss. 24 (1), 25 (1); Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 247. A man may not be tried both by court-martial and by a civil court for the same offence. If he has been dealt with summarily by his commanding officer, he is deemed to have been tried by court-martial. Offences (1) and (2) are, as a rule, tried by court-martial. Serious offences at individual drill are ordinarily punished by discharge under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9) s. 9 (4); see p. 68, ante. Offences at continuous training are ordinarily disposed of by the commanding officer or by court-martial (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 249). Proceedings before a civil court should in no case be taken until the sanction of the commanding officer of the unit, or a superior military authority, has been signified to the court, and must not be taken if the case has already been dealt with by the commanding officer or a court-martial, or if the time limit (see p. 76, post) has been exceeded (Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraph 250). For the definition of "court of summary jurisdiction," see Army Act, s. 190 (35), applied by Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 38; as to courts of summary jurisdiction, generally, and summary procedure, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 571 et seq., pp. 589 et seq.; for the jurisdiction in the Isle of Man, see Offences against the Army Act triable by court-martial only, if committed by members of the Territorial Force when embodied, are cognizable by court-martial only (q).

Organisation.

149. Courts-martial, courts of inquiry, committees and boards are conducted in accordance with the Rules of Procedure and the King's Regulations, and should, if practicable, contain at least one officer of the Territorial Force; if none such is forthcoming for courts of inquiry, committees, or boards, an adjutant of a Territorial Force unit must be detailed. If it is impracticable to detail an officer of the Territorial Force to serve on a court-martial for the trial of an accused person belonging to the Territorial Force, this must be stated by the convening officer in the order convening the court (r).

(3) Provisions relating to the arrest, trial, and punishment of offenders, including the summary dealing with a case by a commanding officer, are applied to any offence under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (s), Part II., punishable on conviction by a court-martial, but the forfeiture and stoppages referred to are to be interpreted as those prescribed by orders and regulations for the Territorial Force (u).

offences.

152. Proceedings against an offender for any offence punishable under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (h), Part II., and alleged to have been committed by him when a member of the Territorial Force, may be instituted at any time within two months after the offence becomes known to his commanding officer, if the alleged offender is then apprehended, or within two months after the time at which he is apprehended (i).

Members of the Territorial Force alleged to be guilty of offences against the Army Act are liable to be tried by court-martial for such offences, although they may have ceased to be subject to military law, provided that the trial is begun within three months after they have ceased to be so subject (k).

SECT. 1.

154. A member of the Territorial Force when subject to military law and charged with an offence under the Army Act may be placed in military custody (m). If charged with an offence cognizable both by court-martial and by a court of summary jurisdiction (n), he may be taken into custody, although it is intended to proceed against him in the civil court (o). If charged with certain offences relating to enlistment he may be taken into military custody (p).

Arrest.

Proceedings.

156. A man of the Territorial Force who, without leave lawfully granted or reasonable excuse allowed in the prescribed manner, fails to fulfil the conditions of preliminary or annual training is liable to forfeit to His Majesty a sum not exceeding £5 (r). The proceedings are on complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction by the officer commanding the unit acting under the direction and authority of the county association concerned (s).

If the offence is one of desertion, the time between the commission of the offence and the apprehension or voluntary surrender of the offender is not reckoned as service for the purpose of discharge (t).

equipment.

158. If a member of the Territorial Force designedly makes away with, wrongfully damages, negligently loses, or wrongfully omits to deliver up on demand anything issued to him as a member of the Territorial Force, the value may be recovered from him by the county association as a civil debt under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (u). All such proceedings are by summons issued on complaint to a justice only, and must be instituted within six months of the date of the offence. If the offence is one of designedly making away with or wrongfully damaging, he is further liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (u) to a fine not exceeding £5 (a).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Civil Duties and Privileges.

Duties in aid of civil power.

159. Members of the Territorial Force are not liable to be called out in their military capacity to aid the civil power in the preservation of peace (b). They are subject to the general obligation attaching to all His Majesty's subjects to use all reasonable endeavours to suppress riots. If required by the civil authority to act as special constables they must carry the ordinary constable's staff and must not wear uniform (c). In case of serious and dangerous disturbance the civil authority may require them, in common with all other subjects of His Majesty, to use weapons suitable to the occasion (d). In case of an attack on their storehouses or armouries they may combine in organised force to resist it, and may use arms if necessity so requires (e).

offices.

160. No member of the Territorial Force can be compelled to serve as a peace or parish officer, or to serve on any jury (f). The acceptance of a commission in the Territorial Force does not vacate the seat of a member of Parliament. Officers who are members of Parliament are not on that account seconded (g). A field officer of the Territorial Force cannot be required to serve in the office of high sheriff. During embodiment a sheriff who is an officer of the Territorial Force is discharged from personally performing the office of sheriff, and the under-sheriff is responsible for the due execution of the office (h). An officer of the Territorial Force may be nominated or elected to or hold the office of sheriff or a municipal office, notwithstanding the assembly for annual training of his battalion or corps (i).

SECT. 1.
Organisation.

161. A member of the Territorial Force does not by enlistment or service forfeit or lose any interest which he possesses in a friendly society, whether registered or unregistered (k).

Members of

The exemption from jury service is absolute as regards Scotland, but as regards England and Wales is under the Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), s. 12, dependent on the exclusion of the privileged person's name from the jury list. Every member of the Territorial Force who is legally qualified and otherwise liable for service as a county or borough juror should obtain from his immediate commanding officer a certificate of membership and at once forward it, with a claim for exemption, to the overseer of his parish in the case of a county or to the clerk of the peace of the borough. On leaving the Territorial Force he should give notice to the overseer or the clerk of the peace. To ensure exemption while serving he should, in the case of a county, ascertain personally that his name is not upon the published list of jurors, with a view, if necessary, to an appeal to special sessions: in the case of a borough, he should claim exemption whenever summoned to serve and should send in notices of exemption in each year. In either case, if summoned, he should return the citation to the summoning officer with a statement of the ground of exemption, and exemption will then probably be granted; see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 418—424; titles CORONERS, Vol. VIII., p. 261; JURIES, Vol. XVIII., p. 232. Scotland is specially dealt with in the Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 425—427.

Members of the Territorial Force who, at the commencement of their training, are insured persons under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), while training and in receipt of army pay, are deemed to be in the sole employment of the Crown within ibid., Part I. (ibid., s. 46 (8)). The provisions relating to the regular army relate also to the Territorial Force when embodied (ibid., s. 46 (7)). Railways.

162. The provisions of the Army Act relating to duties, tolls, and ferries (l), and all other enactments relating to the same, apply to officers and men of the Territorial Force, when going to or returning from any place for non-attendance at which they are liable to be punished, in all respects as though they were officers and men of the regular forces on duty (m).

Railway companies may be required to provide for the conveyance of officers and men of the Territorial Force by rail at certain limited charges. When the Territorial Force is embodied, the Crown, by order under the hand of a Secretary of State, may claim precedency in traffic over the railways of the United Kingdom (n).

SUB-SECT. 11.—Imperial and Special Service Sections.

In general.

163. The Crown may organise sections of the Territorial Force by voluntary agreement with any parts or individuals of the force who offer through their commanding officer to serve—

(1) In any place outside the United Kingdom;

(2) For purposes of defence at such places within the United Kingdom as may be specified in their agreement, whether the Territorial Force is embodied or not.

The first section is named the Imperial Service section and the second the Special Service section. The offer must in every case be voluntary, and cannot be certified until the commanding officer has explained its voluntary nature to every person making it (o).

Imperial
section.

164. Members of the Imperial Service section are required to sign an agreement in the presence of the officer commanding their unit undertaking to serve abroad in time of national emergency with their unit or part of their unit. Unless a notification to the contrary is received, the agreement holds good until the termination of the man's engagement. In other respects members of the Imperial Service section continue as members of the Territorial Force (p).

Special
section.

165. Members of the Special Service section must engage to serve in case of national emergency, when called on to do so under the authority of the Secretary of State, for not more than one month in the coast defences or other places specified in their agreement,

They may terminate their agreement by giving three calendar months' notice in writing to their commanding officer; but, if called out for special service before the notice has expired, must complete their agreed period of service. They may be discharged at any time by authority of the general officer commanding in chief, and from that time revert to the ordinary conditions of service in the Territorial Force (q).

Members of the Special Service section receive an annual retaining fee of 10*s*. In the event of their being called out for special service a gratuity of £5 5*s*. is paid to them as soon as possible after they report themselves for duty. While on special service they retain the rank which they held in the Territorial Force, and receive the pay and allowances of the corresponding rank in the corresponding arm of the regular army. Subject to the provisions of that Act the Army Council may make regulations for carrying that part of the Act into effect, and by such regulations may apply for the purposes of that part of the Act any provision in any Act of Parliament dealing with similar matters, with the necessary adaptations. Such regulations must be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as possible after they are made (b).

168. An association may be established for any county or riding of a county in the United Kingdom for which a lieutenant is appointed, and also for the City of London and for the Isle of Man (c).

Each county association is constituted, and its members are appointed, in accordance with a scheme made by the Army Council (d). A scheme must be laid before both Houses of Parliament within forty days after it is made, if Parliament is then sitting, or, if not, within forty days after the commencement of the next session. If within the next subsequent forty days an address is presented to the Crown by either House praying that the scheme may be annulled, the Crown may annul it by Order in Council, and the scheme is thenceforth void, but any proceedings taken under it meanwhile remain valid (e). A scheme may be varied or revoked at any time by a subsequent scheme under the same conditions (f).

scheme.

169. Every scheme must provide, among other matters, for the date of establishment and for the incorporation of the association, for the appointment of its president, chairman and vice-chairman, members, officials, committees, and other matters connected therewith. It may also contain any consequential supplemental or transitory provisions necessary or proper for its purposes and, if specially desirable, provisions which might otherwise be made by regulation under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (g).

If on account of its size and population it is desirable to divide a

170. The president of an association is the lieutenant for the time being of the county (i) for which the association is formed ; but failing him the Army Council may appoint such other person as they think fit (k). If present at a meeting of the association, the president is entitled to preside. His office is not vacated by continued absence or other delinquency, unless such as to deprive him of the office of lieutenant (l). He has a right to recommend persons for first appointment to the lowest rank of officer in the units in his county, provided that he exercises the right within thirty days after receiving notice of the vacancy (m). He may no longer recommend persons for first appointment to a commission as quartermaster (n). A guard of honour or escort may be provided for him on his arrival at the headquarters of a unit, if the officers and men volunteer for the duty. When present in uniform at a review, field day, or inspection consisting solely of Territorial Force units of his county or association, he is entitled to the salute on coming to the ground and at the march past, wherever the parade may be held, but he has no share in the military command (o).

President.

171. The chairman and vice-chairman are elected by the association (p). They hold office for one year, but are eligible for re-election. On a casual vacancy occurring in these offices the person newly elected holds office until the time when his predecessor would have gone out of office, but is then eligible for re-election. A chairman or vice-chairman whose term of office has expired by effluxion of time must, if he is a member of the association, continue to hold office until a successor is appointed. If the president is absent from a meeting of the association or does not exercise his right to preside, the chairman presides. If the chairman is absent, the vice-chairman presides; in the absence of both, the members present choose a member to preside (q).

In the Isle of Man the Governor is in the position of a lieutenant of a county (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), ss. 39 (3), 40 (2) (a)). For the appointment of lords lieutenants of counties, and deputy lieutenants, and other provisions relating thereto, see Militia Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 49), ss. 29—36 ; these provisions are now the only true operative parts of that Act.

172. Military members are appointed by the Army Council on the recommendation of the general officer commanding in chief of the command. On the occurrence of a vacancy the association through its secretary must inform the general officer commanding in chief, and may at the same time suggest how the vacancy should be filled. The military members must be officers representative of all arms and branches of the Territorial Force raised within the county. The number of the military members must be specified in each scheme and must not be less than one-half of the whole members of the association (r). The term of office is for three years, but the Army Council may at any time cancel the appointment of a military member and appoint another in his place, if in its opinion the military members have ceased to represent fairly the arms and branches of the Territorial Force within the county. Membership is also terminated when the qualification as an officer ceases to exist (s).

tive members.

173. The Army Council may, if it appears desirable, appoint representatives of county and county borough councils and of universities wholly or partly within the county to serve on a county association. Before making an appointment the Army Council must consult with and receive the recommendation of the body to be represented (t). The number of representatives to be granted is fixed in each scheme. Representative members hold office for three years, but are eligible for re-election (a).

members.

174. An association may further co-opt such number of other members as its scheme provides, and the scheme may provide that they shall include representatives of the interests of employers and of workmen (b). In a year in which all the ordinary members of the association are newly appointed the first business at the first meeting of the association must be the appointment of the co-opted members. Their term of office is for three years, but they are eligible for re-election (c).

and Sussex may provide that the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports shall ex officio be a member of either or both of those associations. A similar provision applies to the Warden of the Stannaries in the cases of Cornwall and Devon (d). 176. A member other than the president vacates his office as such if absent from meetings for more than six months, except for some reason approved by the association, or if sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour without the option of a fine, or if adjudged bankrupt or compelled to make an arrangement with his creditors (f).

office.

177. No person may become or continue to be a member of an association if he holds any paid office under the association, or is concerned in any bargain entered into with the association, or participates in the profit of such bargain or of any work done under the authority of the association, except in the case of the sale or lease of land to the association; agreements as to compensation under the Military Manœuvres Act, 1897 (g); interest in a newspaper in which the association advertises; contracts with the association as a shareholder in a joint stock company; bargains specially excepted by the Army Council (h).

181. Associations may from time to time appoint joint committees out of their respective bodies for any purpose in which they are jointly interested, the costs to be defrayed in such proportions as may be agreed. Subject to the terms of its delegation, a joint committee may exercise all or any of the powers of the appointing associations (m).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Powers and Duties.

In general.

182. The powers and duties which may be assigned to county associations in respect of the organisation (n) and administration (o) of the military forces include any powers or duties vested in the Crown or conferred or imposed on the Army Council or a Secretary of State by statute or otherwise (p). Assignment is made by order of the Crown under the hand of a Secretary of State, or, subject thereto, by regulations under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (q). The Army Council may also make regulations concerning the manner in which the powers are to be exercised and duties performed (r).

Special powers and duties.

183. The following powers and duties are specifically stated to be appropriate to county associations (s):—the organisation, maintenance, and administration of the units of the Territorial Force (t); recruiting and the definition of recruiting areas for the Territorial Force (a); the provision and maintenance of ranges, buildings, and sites of camps for the Territorial Force, of accommodation for the safe custody of arms and equipment, and of areas for Every association on incorporation has power to hold land without licence in mortmain for the purposes of the Territorial Force (h).

184. It is the duty of every county association to make itself acquainted with and conform to the plan of the Army Council for the organisation of the Territorial Force within the county, to ascertain the military resources and capabilities of the county, and to give aid and advice to the Army Council and to such officers as it may direct (i).

County associations grant admittance to, and during peace decide the conditions of discharge from, the Territorial Force Reserve. Powers over the Territorial Reserve are to be gradually delegated to them. Except in Ireland and the Channel Islands, where no county associations exist, they alone are authorised to register names for the National Reserve and to frame rules for its formation and organisation.

Voluntary

SUB-SECT. 5.—Finance.

185. To enable a county association to meet the necessary expenditure connected with the discharge of its duties, grants to an amount determined by the Army Council are made out of Army funds (k).

The services to which the grants may be applied are specified in regulations made by the Army Council, subject to the consent of the Treasury (l). The grants paid under the head of lands and buildings (m) may not be expended on any other object without the written consent of the Army Council (n). With that exception a county association has full discretion to apply its public funds (o) to any of certain approved services (p), to select among the approved services the objects to which they shall be devoted, and to allocate them in such proportions as it thinks fit among the various units. Before they can be employed for purposes outside the approved services the written consent of the Army Council is required (g).

Apart from its public funds a county association may receive moneys from private sources. These private funds, when not (k) Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 3 (1). With respect to four of these grants, namely, (A) establishment grants; (B) clothing and personal equipment grants, and grants for upkeep of harness and saddlery; (C) travelling grants for drills etc. outside the training period; (D) grants for rent, for structural repairs, for payment of fees and other duties (see Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 743—733), the county association must submit to the Army Council, not later than the 1st December in each year, an estimate of the amount anticipated to be earned during the ensuing financial year. Payment is made to the association on the basis of this estimate when approved (Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 9), s. 3 (2); Territorial Force Regulations, 1912, paragraphs 774, 775). The remaining grants are made without an annual estimate (ibid., paragraphs 779—796). For the general principles of county association finance and the power of the Army Council to withhold portions of grants in the event of units or parts of units failing to prove themselves efficient, see ibid., paragraphs 734—736; for the case of a deficit, see ibid., paragraph 816; and compare ibid. paragraph 747A. The funds of the county association must be kept absolutely distinct from the funds allotted to the General Officer Commanding in Chief, which are credited to him annually for the training of the Territorial Force, for which he alone is responsible (ibid., paragraphs 692—732). For the regulations governing the allocation of various expenses to the fund by which they are to be borne, see ibid., paragraphs 679—691.

186. Every county association must cause its accounts to be made up annually and audited by a professional auditor approved by the Army Council. Copies of the accounts as audited, together with the auditor's report, must be sent to the Army Council. The Army Council have the right to investigate the financial position and administration of any county association, and to call for any vouchers relating to the accounts of its public funds (s).

SECT. 1.—Courts of Law in Relation to Naval and Military Jurisdiction.

187. Persons subject to naval or military law are not exempt from the jurisdiction of the civil courts in respect of offences against the ordinary law of the land (t). It therefore follows that such persons may be tried by a civil court even though they have already been dealt with by a court-martial, but in the case of a military prisoner the civil court must have regard to any military punishment which the offender may have undergone (u). On the other hand, persons who have been acquitted or convicted of an offence by a civil court may not be tried over again by a military court-martial for the same offence (v). It is the duty of commanding officers to hand over offenders to the civil power (w).

The trophy tax is now collected as part of the general rate of the City (see title RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., p. 131), upon a precept of the Lieutenants for the City of London addressed to the Common Council (City of London (Union of Parishes) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. cxi.) s. 16 (1)); the Common Council has no control over the expenditure of the tax (ibid., s. 16 (2)); see also title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 423, note (a).

188. Courts-martial, like the inferior civil courts, are subject to the supervision and control of the civil courts of higher degree (x). This jurisdiction is not exercised by way of appeal from courts-martial, nor is it operative where only questions of military status are at issue. The intervention of the civil courts takes the form of the issue of one of the prerogative writs (y).

189. Where an order or a sentence of a court-martial affects civil rights, and the court-martial has acted without jurisdiction or in an irregular manner, application may be made to the High Court of Justice for a writ of certiorari calling upon the court-martial to certify and return the record of the proceedings (a). If the order or sentence is found to be invalid it will be quashed by the High Court (a). The writ will not issue where the only matter involved is a question of military regulations or status (b).

Prohibition.

190. Excess of jurisdiction, as distinct from irregularity of procedure, on the part of a court-martial may be restrained by a writ of prohibition issuing out of the High Court of Justice (c); the writ will not issue merely on the ground that the evidence establishing a military offence also discloses a civil crime of higher degree over which a court-martial would have no jurisdiction (d).

corpus.*

191. Persons who are aggrieved by being illegally detained in naval or military custody can avail themselves of the remedy afforded by the writ of habeas corpus (e), provided that they are not alien enemies (f). It is the duty of the officer detaining the complainant to make a return to the writ (g), and it will, generally speaking, be a sufficient return that the complainant is a person subject to naval or military law. Thus, where the complainant is in custody under the sentence of a competent naval or military court, it is unnecessary to set forth the particular circumstances warranting the sentence or order (h).

The civil courts are reluctant to interfere in matters of discipline, but the writ may issue where the necessary formalities have not been complied with (i), or where the proceedings of the naval or 192. Offences triable in a civil court under the Army Act which are not misdemeanours or punishable on indictment must be dealt with by a court of summary jurisdiction (m) having jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed, or where the offender may be for the time being (n). The proceedings are to be regulated by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts so far as applicable (o).

Part I.—Introductory.

SECT. 1.—Sale in General.

SECT. 1.

Sale in General.Sale, exchange,
or barter.

216. Sale (a) being the transfer of the ownership of a thing from one person to another for a money price, where the consideration for the transfer consists of other goods, or some other valuable consideration, not being money, the transaction is called exchange or barter (b); but in certain circumstances it may be treated as one of sale (c).

The law relating to contracts of exchange or barter is undeveloped, but the courts seem inclined to follow the maxim of the civil law, permutatio vicina est emptio, and to deal with such contracts as analogous to contracts of sale (d). It is clear, however, that statutes relating to sale would have no application to transactions by way of barter (e).

(a) As to alienation of personal property, see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 402 et seq.; as to bailment, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 523 et seq.; as to pawns, see title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 233 et seq.

(b) Read v. Hutchinson (1813), 3 Camp. 352 (goods to be exchanged for bill of third party without recourse); Harrison v. Luke (1845), 14 M. & W. 139. For the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), transfers in exchange for money's worth are "conveyances on sale" (Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Maple & Co (Paris), Ltd., [1908] A. C. 22); see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., p. 728.

(c) If the goods are to be paid for by money and other goods, on which a fixed value is put, the contract may be treated as one of sale for the aggregate sum as the price (Hands v. Burton (1808), 9 East, 349; followed, Sarty v. Wilkin (1843), 11 M. & W. 622; Aldridge v. Johnson (1857), 7 E. & B. 885; see also Harman v. Reeve (1856), 18 C. B. 587). If the goods on either side are delivered, any money balance payable may be recovered as on a contract of sale (Sheldon v. Cox (1824), 3 B. & C. 420; Bull v. Parker (1842), 7 Jur. 282; see also Ingram v. Shirley (1816), 1 Stark. 185 (balance struck payable in money), as explained in Harrison v. Luke, supra; Garey v. Pyke (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 512 (no balance struck)). If the party liable to deliver goods in exchange refuses to do so, or disables himself from doing so, the other party may recover on a quantum valebant the value of the goods given in exchange, under the general principle stated in title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 440 (Forsyth v. Jervis (1816), 1 Stark. 437; Keys v. Harwood (1846), 2 C. B. 905).

(d) See Fairmaner v. Budd (1831), 7 Bing. 574; Emanuel v. Dane (1812), 3 Camp. 299 (warranty); La Neuville v. Nourse (1813), 3 Camp. 351 (caveat emptor); Power v. Wells (1778), 2 Cowp. 818; Emanuel v. Dane, supra (property passes on delivery). Lord BLACKBURN says (Contract of Sale, 1st ed., Introduction, p. 3) that the legal effect of contracts of sale and of barter is the same; see the Indian Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act No. IV. of 1882), ss. 118 et seq.

(e) Thus, e.g., the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (see p. 125, post), would not apply, while the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4 (agreements not to be performed within the year), would apply. So, again, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 14, 15 (see pp. 157 et seq., post), relating to implied conditions, would, as such, be equally inapplicable. So, too, the contract, if in writing and exceeding £5 in value, would require to be stamped according to its terms, as not falling under the exemption of contracts of sale (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sched. I., title "Agreement"). As to stamps on contracts of sale, see pp. 165, 166, post.

SECT. 1.
Sale in General.
Mortgage.

217. A mortgage is sometimes called a conditional sale, but a sale subject to a condition for resale to the original seller is distinguishable from a mortgage (f). The essence of a mortgage of goods is the transfer of the general property in the goods from mortgagor to mortgagee in order to secure a debt (g). It is a question of substance, not form, whether a given transaction is really a mortgage or a sale (h).

The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (i), has no application to any transaction in the form of a contract of sale which is intended to operate by way of mortgage, pledge, charge, or other security (j).

Assignments
of contract of sale.

218. The rights and obligations under a contract of sale may be assigned under the like conditions and qualifications as in the case of other contracts (j).

(f) See the distinction stated by CAVE, J., in Beckett v. Tower Assets Co., [1891] 1 Q. B. 1, at p. 25. For instances of conditional sales, see Williams v. Burgess (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 499; Shaw v. Jeffery (1860), 13 Moo. P. C. C. 432.

(g) Keith v. Burrows (1876), 1 C. P. D. 722, 731; Re Hardwick, Ex parte Hubbard (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 690, 698, C. A.; Re Morritt, Ex parte Official Receiver (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 222, 232, C. A.; see, further, title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., p. 5.

(h) Compare title MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 72.

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 61 (4). The governing word of this clause is "intended." If the intention be to create a mortgage, the form is immaterial, and conversely in the case of a sale; see, generally, Re Watson, Ex parte Official Receiver in Bankruptcy (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 27, C. A. (bill of sale); Madell v. Thomas & Co., [1891] 1 Q. B. 230, C. A. (bill of sale); Maas v. Pepper, [1905] A. C. 102, H. L. (bill of sale); Lawrence v. Lawrence's Trustee, Lawrence v. Sievright and Miller (1899), 6 Scots Law Times 435 (genuine sale intended: motive security); Cushing v. Dupuy (1880), 5 App. Cas. 409, P. C. (pledge under guise of sale). In view of the explicit provisions of the Act, cases decided before it, where it was held that the transaction was sale, not mortgage, must be looked into rather critically; see, e.g., M'Bain v. Wallace & Co. (1881), 6 App. Cas. 588, where it was held that, if the intention is to create a sale, the existence of an ulterior object that the transaction should operate so as to give security for a loan is immaterial. In the two following cases it was held (Lord YOUNG dissenting) that M'Bain v. Wallace & Co., supra, has been overridden by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71):—Jones & Co.'s Trustee v. Allan (1901), 4 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 374; Rennett v. Mathieson (1903), 40 Sc. L. R. 421. See generally, titles BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., pp. 1 et seq.; MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 129; PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 234 et seq.

(j) Tolhurst v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (1900), [1903] A. C. 414 (contract to supply a certain quantity of chalk every year for fifty years); E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18 (assignment by buyers of c.f.i. contract for hops); Cole v. Handasyde & Co., [1910] S. C. 68; Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs, [1901] 2 Ch. 608; compare Doe d. Calvert v. Reid (1830), 10 B. & C. 849 (agreement to take beer from brewer); Cooper v. Micklesfield Coal and Lime Co. (1912), 107 L. T. 457 (sale of coal by instalments during two years; specially low prices to buyer). As to the general principle, see per curiam in Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Mining Co. (1887), 127 United States Reports, 379, 387; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 494 et seq. As the price when payable constitutes an ordinary debt, the seller's right to it may be assigned like any other book debt, even although the contract itself be not assignable (Crouch v. Martin (1707), 2 Vern. 595; followed in Russell & Co., Ltd. v. Austin Fryers (1909), 25 T. L. R. 414 (personal service); International Fibre Syndicate v. Dawson (1901), 84 L. T. 803, H. L.); compare title CHOSSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., pp. 368 et seq., 402, 403.

219. The transfer of the property in goods under sales made in foreign countries is in general regulated by the law of the place where the goods are situate at the time of the sale, the rule being that, if personal property be disposed of in a manner binding according to the lex situs, that is, the law of the country where it is at the time, that disposition is binding everywhere (k).

SECT. 1.
Sale in General.
laws.

But the construction of a contract of sale, in so far as it creates mutual rights in personam, is determined by the lex contractus, that is to say, the law which the parties contemplated as governing the contract; primâ facie, this law is the law of the place where the contract is made, the lex loci (l). Questions as to the admissibility of evidence, or as to the enforceability of the contract by action in this country, belong to the lex fori, that is, the law of the country in which the action is brought (m).

SECT. 2.—The Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

220. The law relating to the sale of goods has been codified by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (a), in this title frequently referred to as “the Act.” The Act, which must be construed like any other statute (b), applies to the whole of the United Kingdom, uniform rules being laid down for England and Ireland, but certain special rules of Scottish law being either saved or re-enacted as applicable to Scotland (c). Speaking broadly, the English law of sale has developed on lines of its own, while Scottish law has been founded on, and has closely adhered to, the rules of the civil law. Hence, apart from mere nomenclature, the divergences between the two systems.

Sale of Goods
Act, 1893.

221. The Act (a) deals only with those rules of law which are peculiar to the law of sale: if the whole law of contract were codified, the Act would form merely a chapter in that code; and does not, therefore, deal with questions common to the whole law of contract (d). If then, for example, any question arises on a contract of sale as to what constitutes a valid offer or acceptance of the offer (e), or whether there has been a sufficient consensus in idem

general law.

(d) Ibid., s. 61 (2) (see pp. 281, 282, post), expressly saving the rule of the common law. The law of bankruptcy, the Bills of Sale Acts, and Acts relating to the sale of goods which are not expressly repealed, e.g., certain provisions of the Merchandise Marks Acts, are also saved (ibid.).

(e) See title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 345 et seq.; and, as to contracts for as to the subject-matter or the personality of the parties (f), or whether the contract has been validly rescinded or performed by substitution (g), reference must be made to the general law of contract. So, again, quite apart from contract, the seller of goods may be liable ex delicto if he sells dangerous goods without fair warning to the buyer (h), or commits any act infringing the buyer's right of property in the goods, as by converting them (i).

"Goods"

222. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (k), relates only to goods as thereby defined, and the sale or transfer of other personal chattels is left to be regulated by ordinary law (l).

For this purpose, unless the context or subject-matter otherwise requires, "goods" include all chattels personal other than things in action and money (m). The term includes emblements, industrial growing crops, and things attached to or forming part of the land which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale (n).

(l) See, for example, the common law warranty of title when a negotiable instrument payable to bearer is sold, i.e., transferred for value by mere delivery (Raphael & Sons v. Burt & Co. (1884), Cab. & El. 325; Westropp v. Solomon (1849), 8 C. B. 345, 373; Meyer v. Richards (1895), 163 United States Reports, 385, 405). As to "choses" or "things in action," see title CHOSSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., pp. 359 et seq. As to goods constituting an interest in land, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 238, 241; compare Marshall v. Green (1875), 1 C. P. D. 35; Morgan v. Russell & Sons, [1909] 1 K. B. 357. An undivided portion of goods may be "goods" for the purpose of sale (Marson v. Short (1835), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 118 (half a horse); see also Cochrane v. Moore (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 57, 73, C. A. (same: gift). Money, that is to say, current money, is necessarily excluded, because in sale the goods and the price are contrasted. If a man changes a sovereign for another the contract is exchange, not sale. But a Jubilee £5 gold piece, bought as a curiosity, may be treated as goods, and not as money (Moss v. Hancock, [1899] 2 Q. B. 111). As to the sale of ships and undivided shares in ships, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

As to "emblements," that is to say, vegetable products which are the annual result of agricultural labour, see title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., pp. 282, 283. The term "industrial growing crops" was added when the Bill was extended to Scotland; but there seems to be nothing to confine the words to Scotland, and the effect may be to put all industrial crops, such as grass, clover etc., on the same footing as emblements for the purposes of the Act, and to override such cases as Graves v. Weld (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 105 (clover not included in emblements); see also Kingsbury v. Collins (1827), 4 Bing. 202 (teazles). The concluding words of the definition appear to give a general rule for dealing with all things attached to the land, other than emblements and industrial growing crops, and to get rid of subtleties as to whether they were to be severed by buyer or seller, or whether they were to get any benefit from remaining attached to the land before severance. Under the Act the sole test appears to be whether the thing attached to the land has become by agreement goods, by reason of the contemplation of its severance from the soil; compare the cases cited in titles AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., pp. 293, 294; LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 426. The cases before the Act arose mainly on the construction of the words "goods, wares, and merchandises" in the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17. Obviously decisions on these words must be applied with caution to the present definition, which relates not only to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, reproducing the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17, but to the whole Act. As regards growing products of the soil, other than emblements, see title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., pp. 293, 294; Teal v. Auty (1820), 2 Brod. & Bing. 99 (growing poles); but compare Morgan v. Russell & Sons, [1909] 1 K. B. 357 (slack attached to land).

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 1 (1); for the statutory definitions of "goods" and "property," see p. 112, ante, p. 120, post; as to continuing offers, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 346. The essence of sale is the transfer of ownership from one person to another for a price, i.e., in exchange for a price as a quid pro quo. It is not every payment of money on a transfer of property that constitutes a sale. Thus, the payment may be the motive of a gift by the person transferring the property (Denn v. Manifold v. Diamond (1825), 4 B. & C. 243; Massy v. Nanney (1837), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 478). Again, a tender of money, even in pursuance of an award, will not transfer the property as on a sale, unless the owner of the property agrees to receive it as the price (Hunter v. Rice (1812), 15 East, 100). On the other hand, a delivery of goods previously made for other reasons may be subsequently treated as a sale (Coles v. Bulman (1848), 6 C. B. 184). English law always regards the substance and not the form of a transaction (Re Watson, Ex parte Official Receiver in Bankruptcy (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 27, C. A.). A contract may be clothed with the form of a contract of sale, or may contain terms implying that it is a contract of sale, but if, on its true construction, it appears to be some other kind of contract, effect will be given to it as such, and the provisions of the Act do not apply. Thus, a seller may, unless he is estopped, show that the sale was a pretended one, and that no property was intended to pass, but that a mere bailment was in fact intended (Bowes v. Foster (1858), 2 H. & N. 779; approved, Lee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co. (1871), 6 Ch. App. 527, 535); or the alleged buyer may show that delivery was made to him only as an agent to sell (Miller v. Newman (1842), 4 Man. & G. 646). For the general principle, see Weiner v. Harris, [1910] 1 K. B. 285, C. A., where goods were sent nominally on sale or return, but the contract on its true construction was held to be merely a contract of agency for sale. See, further, Cobbold v. Caston (1824), 1 Bing. 399 (sale or agency to procure goods); Grizewood v. Blane (1851), 11 C. B. 526, 538 (wager under guise of sale); Re Nevill, Ex parte White (1871), 6 Ch. App. 397 (sale or del credere agency); compare Re Smith, Ex parte Bright (1879), 10 Ch. D. 566, C. A. B. 357 (sale of goods, or licence to get mineral products from land); compare title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., pp. 567, 568. As to mortgages see p. 110, ante. As to sale compared and contrasted with gifts, see Cochrane v. Moore (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 57, C. A.; title GIFTS, Vol. XV., pp. 398, 399, 404; and with pledge, see Burdick v. Sewell (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 159, 175, C. A.; title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 243, 244.

It is noticeable that no mention is made in the definition of any buying or agreement to buy on the part of the buyer. An agreement to sell does generally, but not always, connote an agreement to buy. For the buyer may have only an option to buy (Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A. C. 471, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C.; Grande Maison d'Automobiles, Ltd. v. Beresford (1909), 25 T. L. R. 522, C. A.). Similarly the seller may have only an option to sell (Manders v. Williams (1849), 4 Exch. 339; Bianchi v. Nash (1836), 1 M. & W. 545). In such cases an actual sale arises when the option is exercised. In neither case can the person having a mere option be treated as liable under an agreement to buy or sell, as the case may be, i.e., under an executory contract. It is sometimes difficult to distinguish a contract of sale from a contract for work and labour, and the distinction is important, as, e.g., under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (see p. 127, post), and under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45). A contract of sale is a contract whose main object is the transfer of the property in, and the delivery of the possession of, a chattel, as a chattel, to the buyer (Lee v. Griffin (1861), 1 B. & S. 272; Dixon v. London Small Arms Co. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 632). Where the main object of a contract for work is not the transfer of a chattel quod chattel, the contract is one for work and labour (Clay v. Yates (1856), 1 H. & N. 73; Grafton v. Armitage (1845), 2 C. B. 336). Thus, where there is a contract to affix a chattel to land or to another chattel before the property passes, there is no contract of sale either of the chattel or of the separate materials (Clark v. Bulmer (1843), 11 M. & W. 243; Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. v. Rennie (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 271; Reid v. Macbeth and Gray, [1904] A. C. 223); compare title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 556 et seq. A fortiori, where a contract for work and labour is not concerned with a chattel at all, the fact that it involves the transfer of the property in the materials does not constitute a contract of sale of the materials, which are merely accessory to the work (Clark v. Mumford (1811), 3 Camp. 37; Grafton v. Armitage, supra); see, generally, title WORK AND LABOUR. For various forms of contract relating to the sale of goods, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 575—609; Vol. XVI., p. 558.

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 1 (1); Beed v. Blandford (1828), 2 Y. & J. 278; Nicol v. Hennessy (1896), 1 Com. Cas. 410. The ownership of personal property may be indefinitely subdivided, e.g., one person may sell to another an undivided moiety of a chattel (Nyberg v. Handelaar, [1892] 2 Q. B. 202, C. A.; see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 403, 404); so, too, ownership may be split up, as in the case of a pledge, where the pledgor retains the general property, but the pledgee acquires a special property, with a right of sale in certain events; see title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 244. Hence the necessity for this provision in the Act, having regard to the rule that seller and buyer must be different persons. A partner may sell goods to his firm, or a firm may sell goods to one of its partners (Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, C. A.; see, generally, title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXII., pp. 48, 53). As a general rule a man cannot buy his own goods, for there is nothing to buy (3 Bl. Com. 450; Scotson v. Pegg (1861), 6 H. & N. 295, 298). For example, at common law there could be no contract of sale between husband and wife, since in contemplation of law husband and wife were but one person; but this is no longer the case since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75); see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 432; and a number of persons may sell to themselves as a company, for a company is a different person in the eye of the law; see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 12. Again, it may happen that one person is invested by common law or statute with powers to sell the goods of another, as, for instance, where goods are sold under a distress (see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., pp. 180 et seq.), or execution (see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 56 et seq.), or by a pledgee (see title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 244), or a trustee in bankruptcy (see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 119 et seq.). In such cases the owner may purchase his own goods, since in fact the buyer and seller are different persons (Kitson v. Hardwick (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 473, 478 (bankrupt)). But the seller in such cases cannot as a rule be the purchaser, though he is selling goods in which he has no proprietary right, being debarred from so doing on grounds of public policy, because of his fiduciary position (ibid.; Moore, Nettlefold & Co. v. Singer Manufacturing Co., [1904] 1 K. B. 820, C. A.; Plasycod Collieries Co., Ltd. v. Partridge, Jones & Co., Ltd., [1912] 2 K. B. 345).

(g) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 1 (2). As to conditional sales, see, further, pp. 144, 145, post. As a contract of sale includes a sale as well as an agreement to sell (see p. 117, post), the enactment set out in the text means that there may be a conditional agreement to sell, or a conditional sale. As a contract of sale is a consensual contract, it follows that the parties may import into it any such conditions as may be mutually agreed on (Walley v. Montgomery (1803), 3 East, 585; Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Mattos (1863), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, 328). For example, goods may be sold on condition that the buyer retires certain outstanding acceptances of the sellers (Bishop v. Shillito (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 329, n.), or approves of the quality of the goods (Humphries v. Carvalho (1812), 16 East, 45), or that the buyer (being the hirer) should pay for the goods if damaged while in his possession (Bianchi v. Nash (1836), 1 M. & W. 545); so, too, a person may agree to hire goods on the terms that he shall become owner on full payment of the hire (Re Robertson, Ex parte Crawcour (1878), 9 Ch. D. 419, C. A.; Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. 318, C. A.); compare Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A. C. 471 (conditional sale: option to buy); see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., p. 554. A contract of sale may, it seems, be dependent on a state of facts assumed by the parties as the basis of the contract, but not stated in the contract (Bannerman v. White (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 844; compare title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 433, 521, 523 et seq.); and a contract may be conditional on something within the control of the promisor: thus, goods may be contracted for which are to be to the satisfaction of the buyer (Andrews v. Belfield (1857), 2 C. B. (N. S.) 779; Repetto v. Friary Steamship Co. (1901), 17 T. L. R. 265; Haegerstrand v. Anne Thomas Steamship Co. (1905), 10 Com. Cas. 67, C. A.; Shoolbred (James) & Co. v. Wyndham and Albery (1908), Times, 1st December); and see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 433, 434. It depends on the construction of the contract whether the promisor has or has not contracted to do nothing to hinder the occurrence of any event on which performance depends, e.g., his doing so might cause a failure of consideration; see and consider Beswick v. Swindells (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 868, Ex. Ch. (no absolute promise); Mineral Residues Syndicate v. Levant Mine Adventurers (1891), 7 T. L. R. 654, C. A. (no absolute promise: sale of "mine leavings"); Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 488, C. A. (no absolute promise: sale of grains "made by brewers"); Parker v. Cunliffe (1899), 15 T. L. R. 335, C. A. (price contingent on event within buyer's control); Bealey v. Stuart (1862), 7 H. & N. 753; Ogdens, Ltd. v. Nelson, Ogdens, Ltd. v. Telford, [1905] A. C. 109 (absolute contract); and, for the general principle and other cases, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 430, 512. The conditions in a contract of sale may be classified in various ways. Conditional contracts of sale may be divided into (a) contingent contracts, and (b) contracts containing reciprocal promises. In the case of a contingent contract the obligations of one or both of the parties are dependent on the happening or not happening of some specified event, e.g., contracts dependent on the safe arrival of the goods. The non-fulfilment of such conditions gives no right of action to the other party, but such party is discharged from liability (Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co. (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 125, per BRAMWELL, B., at pp. 144, 145, Ex. Ch.). In the case of a contract consisting of reciprocal promises, where the due performance of his promise by one party is the entire consideration for the promise by the other party, performance of the first-mentioned promise is a condition precedent; see rule 4 in the notes to Pordage v. Cole (1669), 1 Wms. Saund., 1871 ed., pp. 548, 556. For example, the obligation of the buyer to accept and pay for the goods may be dependent on delivery by the seller on a particular day, or on the seller shipping them by a particular ship, or the performance of some other like term (Graves v. Legg (1854), 9 Exch. 709; Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, 246, 249, C. A. (declaration of name of vessel)). So, again, pre-payment of the price may be made a condition of the seller's obligation to deliver (rule 2 in notes to Pordage v. Cole, supra). Secondly, conditions may be divided into conditions precedent, concurrent conditions, and conditions subsequent. A condition precedent, or suspensive condition, suspends the obligations of one party until the fulfilment of the condition by the other party, and discharges the first-mentioned party in case of non-fulfilment, as, for example, where there is a sale of goods by description, and goods of the description stipulated for are not supplied; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13; p. 154, post; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 432 et seq. Concurrent conditions are those reciprocal promises which must be performed by both parties at the same time. For example, in a contract of sale, delivery and payment, unless otherwise agreed, are concurrent conditions; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28; p. 205, post; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 434. Conditions subsequent, or resolute conditions, are those which provide for the dissolution of the contract on the happening of a specified event; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 432. For example, goods may be sold by auction with a condition that they may be resold if not paid for within twenty-four hours (Lamond v. Davall (1847), 9 Q. B. 1030), or may be returned if not approved of (Head v. Tattersall (1871), L. R. 7 Exch. 7; and see p. 276, post). Again, conditions may be divided into express conditions and implied conditions: in Jones v. Gibbons (1853), 8 Exch. 920, POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 922, says that in contracts of sale "every reasonable condition is implied," but this is rather too wide a statement. The law will not make a contract for the parties, but where they have expressed themselves insufficiently or ambiguously it will endeavour to put a reasonable interpretation on the language used; compare Morgan v. Ravey (1861), 6 H. & N. 265; The Moorcock (1889), 14 P. D. 64, 68, C. A. Implied conditions may also, like express ones, be precedent or subsequent; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 527. Thus, for example, on a sale by sample there is an implied condition precedent that the bulk shall conform to the sample (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (2) (a); pp. 160, 161, post). So, where perishable goods are to be despatched by a carrier, the buyer may, under an implied condition subsequent, reject the goods and revert the property in the seller if the goods arrive in an unmerchantable condition; see p. 224, post. So, also, if the goods are deliverable by instalments, and the full quantity is not made up, the buyer may sometimes reject instalments received (Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co. (1886), 12 App. Cas. 128, P. C.). As to the conditions implied by law on the part of the seller, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 10—15; pp. 152 et seq., post; and as to negating implied conditions by express agreement or usage, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; p. 279, post. Express conditions may be subdivided into conditions in writing and conditions not in writing. In the construction of 224. The term “contract of sale” in the Act includes, where the context admits, both actual sales and agreements to sell (r).

Where under a contract of sale the property in the goods is transferred from the seller to the buyer, the contract is called a “sale”; but where the transfer of the property in the goods is to take place at a future time, or subject to some condition thereafter to be fulfilled, the contract is called an “agreement to sell” (s).

An agreement to sell becomes a sale when the time elapses, or the conditions are fulfilled, subject to which the property in the goods is to be transferred (t).

225. An agreement to sell, or, as it is often called, an executory contract of sale, is a contract pure and simple, whereas a sale, or, as it is called for distinction, an executed contract of sale, is a contract plus a conveyance. Thus, by an agreement to sell a mere jus in personam is created, by a sale a jus in rem is transferred. Where goods have been sold, and the buyer such conditions there is nothing peculiar to the contract of sale. For example, where a condition is expressed in writing, parol evidence of usage is not admissible to reduce it to a mere warranty (Re North Western Rubber Co., Ltd. and Hüttenbach & Co., [1908] 2 K. B. 907, C. A.); or to extend its scope (Dickson v. Zizinia (1851), 10 C. B. 602); see, further, titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 520 et seq.; EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., p. 566. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), contains no express definition of the term “condition,” but it is defined by implication (ibid., s. 11) as a term a breach of which entitles the other party to treat the contract as repudiated by the party committing the breach; see per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1910] 2 K. B. 1003, C. A. The term is in reality not ambiguous. “Warranty” is, however, defined by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1) (see p. 122, post), and a sharp distinction is drawn between conditions and warranties; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 11, 53; pp. 150, 273, post; and see the discussion of “warranty,” note (d), p. 122, post. For the distinction between conditional sales and mortgages, see p. 110, ante.

(s) Ibid., s. 1 (3). By ibid., s. 62 (1), “sale” includes a bargain and sale as well as a sale and delivery; see p. 121, post; see “goods” defined p. 112, ante, and “property,” p. 120, post. As to “conditions,” see note (g), p. 115, ante. The definition in the text is applicable only where there is a contract of sale. Therefore any transaction whereunder the property may pass, although there is originally no mutual agreement binding the parties to sell and buy, must be governed by some other provision, or by the common law.

The rules for determining when an agreement to sell becomes a sale transferring the property in the goods are contained in ibid., ss. 16—19; see pp. 167 et seq., post. According to the civil law, which with some statutory modifications was followed in Scotland before the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) (compare M'Bain v. Wallace & Co. (1881), 6 App. Cas. 588, 605, 608), the property in goods sold did not pass to the buyer until delivery. But English law has rejected the test of delivery, and has adopted the rule that the ownership of the goods may be transferred by the contract itself, if the parties so intend. If the parties express their intention clearly no difficulty arises; but in many cases the parties either form no intention as to the precise time when the property is to pass, or fail to express it. To meet these cases the law has worked out a series of more or less artificial canons, which are now embodied in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18. For the history of the English rule, which is as old as the Year Books, see Cochrane v. Moore (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 57, C. A. (comparing sale and gift).

The Sale
of Goods

makes default in payment, the seller may sue for the contract price (u), but where an agreement to buy is broken, usually the seller's only remedy is an action for unliquidated damages (v). Similarly, if an agreement to sell be broken by the seller, the buyer has only a personal remedy against the seller (w). The goods are the property of the seller and he can dispose of them. They may be taken in execution for his debts (a), and if he becomes bankrupt they pass to his trustee in bankruptcy (b). But if there has been a sale, and the seller breaks his engagement to deliver the goods, the buyer has not only a personal remedy against the seller (c), but also the usual proprietary remedies in respect of the goods themselves, such as the actions for conversion and detinue (d). Again, if there be an agreement for sale and the goods perish, the loss as a rule falls on the seller, while if there has been a sale the loss as a rule falls upon the buyer (e).

Ancillary statutory definitions.

226. Unless the context or subject-matter otherwise requires, the following terms and expressions have the meanings hereinafter assigned to them (f), namely:—

“Action” includes counterclaim and set-off (g).

“Buyer” means a person who buys or agrees to buy goods (h).

(u) See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49; p. 266, post.

For an exception, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2); see p. 267, post. As to the meaning of unliquidated damages, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 304, 305.

(w) See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51; p. 268, post. In the case of specific or ascertained goods the buyer may sue for specific performance; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 52; p. 272, post. As to specific performance generally, see title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

(f) These definitions apply throughout this title, so far as founded on the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), but they do not apply to other Acts, nor to the terms used by the parties in making their contracts. For example, a stipulation in a contract may be a condition although the parties refer to it as a warranty (ibid., s. 11 (1) (b); see p. 150, post). In one case the Act construes a term used in contracts of sale by providing that “month” in a contract of sale means primâ facie a calendar month; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 10 (2); p. 153, post. For the definition of “contract of sale,” see p. 113, ante.

(g) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1). The definition is merely inclusive. For a substantive definition, see title ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 2, 3. “Deliverable state” used in reference to goods means such a state that the buyer would under the contract be bound to take delivery of them (i).

“Delivery” means voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another (k).

“Document of title to goods” has the same meaning as it has in the Factors Act, 1889 (l).

seller must be different persons, but in certain cases a man may buy his own goods when another person sells them; see note (p), p. 114, ante. The definition does not apply to cases under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 4, the context of that rule showing that the “buyer” there mentioned is only a bailee with an option to purchase; see note (n), p. 178, post.

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (4).

(k) Ibid., s. 62 (1). The transfer must be voluntary. If B. steals goods from A. there is no delivery from A. to B., though possession is transferred. It was necessary to define “delivery” for the purposes of sale, because of the confused use of the term in the decided cases. When possession is voluntarily transferred from one person to another there is always a delivery, which is either at once absolute or, if it be subject to a condition, absolute on the fulfilment of the condition. A delivery effectual for one purpose may be ineffectual for another purpose, and then it is frequently said that there has been no delivery: for instance, when the seller of goods delivers them to a carrier to convey them to the buyer, it is in general as effectual as a delivery to the buyer himself for the purpose of passing the property and risk (see ibid., s. 18, r. 5; p. 170, post), and in discharge of the seller’s duty to deliver (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32; see p. 222, post), and to divest his lien (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 43 (1) (a); see p. 244, post), but it is ineffectual for the purpose of defeating the seller’s right of stoppage in transitu. To defeat this there must be a further delivery from the carrier to the buyer; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 45 (1); p. 248, post. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), makes no attempt to define “possession,” and the term is probably too elusive for the purpose of a statutory definition; see, however, the illuminating judgment of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., in Lord’s Trustee v. Great Eastern Railway, [1908] 2 K. B. 54, 61, C. A. As to possession generally, see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 391 et seq.; as to possession on alienation, see ibid., pp. 404 et seq.; and compare Farina v. Home (1846), 16 M. & W. 119 (warehouseman); Swanwick v. Sothorn (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 895; as to “symbolic” delivery, see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., pp. 432, 433; as to possession by bailors and bailees, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 523 et seq.; and by pawnors and pawnees, title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 239 et seq. As to transfer of ownership by delivery of bill of lading, see pp. 184 et seq., post; as to transfer of a ship at sea, see Atkinson v. Maling (1788), 2 Term Rep. 462; title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION. As to the effect of the transfer of delivery orders, warrants etc., see pp. 185, 193, 225, post.

When the buyer takes possession of goods under a licence to seize, the transaction operates as a delivery of the goods by the seller. Here delivery is effected pursuant to a previously given consent, so that the buyer is really acting under the seller’s authority (Congreve v. Evetts (1854), 10 Exch. 298, 308). It may also be noted that, for certain purposes, part delivery may operate as if it were a delivery of the whole; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 42, 45 (7); pp. 243, 255, post.

(l) 52 & 53 Vict. c. 45, s. 1 (4); Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) s. 62 (1); see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 205, note (u). For the purposes of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45) (including the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 25, 47, which reproduce certain provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), ss. 8—10), all the documents enumerated are put on the same footing as bills of lading. But this extended operation is strictly confined to the purposes of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45) (see ss. 2, 8—10)—

SECT. 2.

The Sale of Goods
Act, 1893.

“Fault” means wrongful act or default (m).

“Future goods” means goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract of sale (n).

A thing is deemed to be done “in good faith” when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not (o).

A person is deemed to be “insolvent” who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business, or cannot pay his debts as they become due, whether he has committed an act of bankruptcy or not (p).

“Plaintiff” includes a defendant counterclaiming (q).

that is to say, to dispositions, as affecting the title of third persons, of goods or documents by (1) mercantile agents in possession with the consent of the owner; (2) sellers left in possession after sale; and (3) buyers, being transferees of the documents of title, or being in possession of the goods or documents with the seller's consent; see Inglis v. Robertson, [1898] A. C. 616, 630; Lamb v. Attenborough (1862), 1 B. & S. 831; Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.; and, generally, title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 152, 205. As between buyer and seller a warehouse certificate, dock warrant or delivery order, or any similar document, does not, like a bill of lading, represent the goods themselves, and so does not per se transfer possession; it operates merely as an authority to receive the goods referred to in the document; an attornment by the person in possession to the buyer is necessary (Farina v. Home (1846), 16 M. & W. 119, 123 (dock warrant); Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491 (warehouse certificate); M'Ewan v. Smith (1849), 2 H. L. Cas. 309 (delivery order)); and this is the rule, for whatever purpose a delivery of the goods has to be proved. Even in cases within the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), the question whether any document is a document of title will depend upon whether its nature and operation falls within the concluding words of the definition; see Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., supra. As to the mode of transfer of a document of title, see Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 11; see p. 200, post. SECT. 2.

The Sale
of Goods
Act, 1893.

Burdick v. Sewell (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 159, 175, C. A.; 10 App. Cas. 74, 93. The general property may be in one person while a special property is in another, as in the case of a pledge; see title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 236, 239 et seq., 243 et seq. Again, the general property may be transferred to one person subject to a special property in another (Franklin v. Neate (1844), 13 M. & W. 481 (sale by pawner); Jenkyns v. Brown (1849), 14 Q. B. 496 (pledgee of bill of lading); Dodsley v. Varley (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 632 (special property in seller)); compare title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 241. The right of property in goods may be distinct from the right to their present possession, as in the case of a lien; see Mulliner v. Florence (1878), 3 Q. B. D. 484, C. A. (innkeeper); Milgate v. Kebble (1841), 3 Man. & G. 100 (seller); and see, generally, titles INNS AND INNKEEPERS, Vol. XVII., pp. 323 et seq.; LIEN, Vol. XIX., pp. 1 et seq. Again, property in goods may be divided between different owners, but the right to possession may be in one alone (Nyberg v. Handelslaar, [1892] 2 Q. B. 202, C. A.). As to sale from one part-owner to another, see p. 113, ante.
(s) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); see note (k), p. 159, post.

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1). Under the common law system of pleading before the Judicature Acts, the claim for goods bargained and sold and that for goods sold and delivered were regarded as distinct causes of action (Forbes v. Smith (1863), 11 W. R. 574), but counts for goods bargained and sold, and for goods sold and delivered, together with any other appropriate money counts, could be joined together as of right in the same declaration; it is now ordinarily sufficient in any action for the price of goods sold to show that the property has passed and the price is payable. The old common law distinction, however, embodies principles of substantive law, so that a seller cannot even now recover the price if he has not delivered the goods, where delivery was an essential part of the cause of action. Primâ facie the delivery of the goods and the payment of the price are concurrent conditions (see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28; p. 204, post), but there are many cases where the property has passed, and the price is payable, although the goods have not been delivered, as where the price is payable irrespective of delivery (see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2); p. 267, post), or delivery has been excused. In such cases the price could have been recovered on a count for goods bargained and sold; see, e.g., Hankey v. Smith (1796), Peake, 57 [42], n. (delivery refused by buyer); Kymer v. Suwercropp (1807), 1 Camp. 109 (payment to precede delivery); Alexander v. Gardner (1835), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 671 (loss of goods at buyer's risk); Scott v. England (1844), 14 L. J. (Q. B.) 43; Forbes v. Smith (1863), 11 W. R. 574 (delivery no condition precedent to payment); see title ACTION, Vol. I., p. 38.

(b) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1). This definition follows from the definition of “contract of sale” given by ibid., s. 1; see p. 113, ante. In other statutes the expression “seller” must be construed, literally or not, according to the context and subject-matter; e.g., under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), the person conducting the sale may be the “seller”; see title MEDICINE AND PHARMACY, Vol. XX., pp. 382, 383.

(c) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1). Specific goods must be distinguished from unascertained or generic goods, i.e., goods defined only by description. Under a contract for specific goods the seller does not fulfil his contract by delivering any goods other than those agreed upon; under a contract for generic goods the seller may deliver any goods which answer to the description. The property in specific goods may be

SECT. 2.
The Sale of Goods
Act, 1893.

"Warranty" means an agreement with reference to goods which are the subject of a contract of sale, but collateral to the main purpose of such contract, the breach of which gives rise to a claim for damages, but not to a right to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated (d).

SECT. 3.—Quasi-Contracts of Sale.

- transferred by the contract itself, but no property can be transferred so long as the goods are unascertained; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 16—18; pp. 167, 168, post. Again, specific goods may be the subject of an action for specific performance (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 52; see p. 272, post). So where there is a contract for specific goods, and the goods have perished at the date of the contract, or subsequently perish before the risk passes to the buyer, the contract is void or is avoided respectively; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 6, 7; pp. 145, 146, post. As regards unascertained goods the maxim genus nunquam perit would apply. It is conceived that the term "specific" includes the unascertained product of what is specific, and is not confined to actually existing goods, so that Howell v. Coupland (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 258, C. A. (future crop of particular land), is still law; compare note (f), p. 146, post.

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); Chanter v. Hopkins (1838), 4 M. & W. 399, 404; Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394. A definition of warranty was required, because, before the Act, the term had no settled meaning; compare Parker v. Palmer (1821), 4 B. & Ald. 387; Heyworth v. Hutchinson (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 447, 451; Behn v. Burness (1863), 3 B. & S. 751, 755, Ex. Ch. Much of the confusion arose from the fact that, where goods have been accepted by the buyer, terms which in their origin were conditions, the breach of which would entitle the buyer to reject the goods, must be treated, for remedial purposes, ex post facto as warranties, for the breach of which compensation can only be sought in damages; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 11 (1) (c), 53 (1); pp. 151, 273, post; Graves v. Legg (1854), 9 Exch. 709, 717; see also title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 336, 337. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), throughout contrasts the terms "condition" and "warranty," and further provides that a stipulation may be a condition, though called a warranty in the contract (ibid., s. 11 (1) (b); see p. 150, post). Two points are noticeable in the definition of a warranty. Firstly, it must be an agreement, a promise that the representation is, or will be, true (Behn v. Burness, supra; Bentsen v. Taylor, Sons & Co. (2), [1893] 2 Q. B. 274, C. A.). It is therefore distinguished from mere immaterial representations, not intended to be promises; see p. 149, post; compare title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 698 et seq. Secondly, the agreement must be collateral to the main purpose of the contract, such purpose, fulfilment of which is a condition, being the transfer of the property in, and the possession of, goods of the description contracted for (Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1910] 2 K. B. 1003; reversed, [1911] A. C. 394). The warranty is collateral, because the breach of it, unlike the breach of a condition, is not the breach of the whole consideration moving from the party bound (ibid., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L. J., [1910] 2 K. B. at p. 1011). The question is one of construction (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1) (b); see p. 150, post); see the distinction between dependent and independent agreements stated in title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 435, 520, 521. For a comparison of warranty and guarantee, see title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., p. 440, note (g).

Thus, where in an action for trespass, conversion, or detinue the plaintiff recovers the full value of the goods as damages, and the defendant satisfies the judgment, the transaction operates as a sale from the plaintiff to the defendant as from the time of the satisfaction of the judgment (f). When, however, the judgment against the tortfeasor is in substance for the price of the goods, the judgment transfers the property to the defendant without satisfaction (g).

A recovery in trover of the difference between the value of the goods and the amount of a debt which the plaintiff owes to the defendant would seem to be equivalent to recovery of full value (Chinery v. Viall (1860), 5 H. & N. 288). Expenses necessarily incurred in respect of the goods by the defendant may be deducted from the damages (Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus Brothers & Co., [1892] A. C. 166, per Lord MACNAGHTEN at pp. 170, n., 174 et seq.). If a bailee of goods brings the action and recovers full damages, the rule stated in the text must also apply, for the defendant cannot be subjected to a second action at the suit of the owner (Turner v. Harcastle (1862), 11 C. B. (N. S.) 683; Swire v. Leach (1865), 18 C. B. (N. S.) 479; The Winkfield, [1902] P. 42, C. A.). The rule is probably an illustration of the principle obtaining in cases of indemnity (Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 79; Castellain v. Preston (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 380, C. A.; Rankin v. Potter (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 83, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 118).

(h) Not necessarily any price which may have been put on the goods (Nicol v. Hennessey (1896), 44 W. R. 584).

(i) Hambly v. Trott (1776), Cowp. 371, 376 (trees cut down); explained in Foster v. Stewart (1814), 3 M. & S. 191; Lee v. Shore (1822), 1 B. & C. 94 (wrongful appropriation by stranger); Russell v. Bell (1842), 10 M. & W. 340 (sale by bankrupt after act of bankruptcy); Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Co. v. Ratcliff (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 224 (fraudulent abstraction of gas); Nicol v. Hennessey, supra (wrongful sale by co-owner: rule stated); Rice v. Reed, [1900] 1 Q. B. 54, C. A. (wrongful sale by servant); and see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 464. The owner must prove his title (Lee v. Shore, supra). Where the person having wrongful possession of the goods has bought them from the owner's mercantile agent, the owner's right to recover the price is expressly reserved by the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 12 (3). As to waiver of a tort by suing for money had and received, see Rice v. Reed, supra; Cowern v. Nield, [1912] 2 K. B. 419 (fraudulent infant seller); and title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 484. Another illustration of the principle stated in the text is the case where a person fraudulently induces a sale to an insolvent or infant, and then obtains possession of the goods. Such a case is explainable on the principle that the person in possession cannot by his own wrong set up a sale to

So, too, there may be a sale by estoppel. A person may so conduct himself as to be precluded from denying that he intended to be a buyer or a seller, as the case may be, though in fact he had no such intention (k).

Part II.—Formation of the Contract.

SECT. 1.—Capacity of Parties.

In general.

229. Capacity to buy and sell is regulated by the general law concerning capacity to contract, and to transfer and acquire property (l).

Necessaries.

the insolvent or infant, who is thus treated as the fraudulent person's agent to buy (Selway v. Fogg (1839), 5 M. & W. 83, per PARKE, B., at p. 84); see Biddle and Loyd v. Levy (1815), 1 Stark. 20 (sale to infant); Hill v. Perrott (1810), 3 Taunt. 274; Wilson v. Hart (1817), 7 Taunt. 295; Abbotts v. Barry (1820), 2 Brod. & Bing. 369 (sale to insolvent). Where the fraud consists in a representation as to the credit, ability etc. of another, the representation must be in writing under the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 6; see Haslock v. Fergusson (1837), 7 Ad. & El. 86.

Barton* (1862), 7 H. & N. 899 (buyer at auction), where the court was divided; see, generally, title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., pp. 376 et seq. If a man sells goods to one person and the documents of title relating to those goods to another, obviously he is liable to both; see Coventry v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 776, C. A. (two delivery orders for same goods); Seton v. Lafone (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 139 (warrant for goods, previously delivered to another, treated as good). Certain cases of sale by estoppel may be referred to the rule that a contract of sale may be implied from the conduct of the parties; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 3; p. 126, post. See, further, Gillett v. Hill (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 530; Henderson & Co. v. Williams, [1895] 1 Q. B. 521, C. A.; Farquharson Brothers & Co. v. King & Co., [1902] A. C. 325.

A contract made by a drunken man, known to be drunk, is as a rule voidable, but a drunkard is liable when sober for necessaries supplied to him when drunk (Gore v. Gibson (1845), 13 M. & W. 623, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 626); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 342. The obligation to pay for necessaries supplied to an incompetent person really arises

231. In relation to sales to infants or other incompetent persons, "necessaries" means goods suitable to the condition of life of the infant or other incompetent person, and to his actual requirements at the time of the sale and delivery (n).

Mere luxuries can never be necessaries, but luxurious articles of utility may come under the definition of "necessaries" in the special circumstances of a particular case (o). The standard is always relative (p).

quasi ex contractu; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 67, note (o). It should be noticed that the obligation is only to pay a "reasonable price," not necessarily the price mentioned in the contract; and that the obligation arises on the delivery of the necessaries. There would seem to be, therefore, no obligation on an infant to accept goods, being necessaries, under an executory contract. The liability is on simple contract only; thus, an infant is not liable on an instrument as such, given to secure the price of necessaries, but he must pay a reasonable price for them; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 69. As to contracts with infants other than for necessaries, see ibid., pp. 63, 67, 73, 74. As to contracts for necessaries other than goods, see Roberts v. Gray (1913), 108 L. T. 232, C. A. (o) Chapple v. Cooper (1844), 13 M. & W. 252, 258; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 68. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), lays down a uniform rule for all incompetent persons, but the cases naturally have mainly arisen with regard to infants. Up to the passing of the Act the tendency of the decisions was to restrict the liability of infants, and the older cases, in which infants were held liable, must be tested with reference to the language of the Act.

The following have been held to be necessaries, namely, silk dresses ordered by infant in her mother's presence (Dalton v. Gib (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 198); great-coat for attorney's articled clerk (Brayshaw v. Eaton (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 231); horse supplied to infant under medical direction (Hart v. Prater (1837), 1 Jur. 623); harness and horse clothing sold to infant manager of a farm (Hill v. Arbon (1876), 34 L. T. 125); necessaries for family of married infant (Turner v. Trisby (1719), 1 Stra. 168); see also Chapple v. Cooper, supra (funeral for husband of infant widow); and the cases cited in title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 68, note (a). The following have been held not to be necessaries, namely, clothes for infant already sufficiently supplied (Steedman v. Rose (1842), Car. & M. 422 (naval officer)); and see the cases cited in title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 67, note (p)); hunter worth £150 supplied to infant member of hunt (*Skrine v. Formalities of the Contract.

SECT. 2.—*Formalities of the Contract.*SUB-SECT. 1.—General Rule as to Form.

232. Subject to the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (q), and any other statutory provisions (r), a contract of sale may be made in writing, either with or without seal, or by word of mouth, or partly in writing and partly by word of mouth (s), or may be implied from the conduct of the parties (t).

(r) As to contracts not to be performed within a year, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 365, 366; as to the sale of horses in fairs and markets, see title MARKETS AND FAIRS, Vol. XX., p. 54; as to the sale of sculpture with copyright, see title COPYRIGHT AND LITERARY PROPERTY, Vol. VIII., p. 207; as to the sale of British ships and shares therein, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION; and as to the sale of specific goods, see pp. 174—176, post. The law affecting corporations is expressly excepted from the operation of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 3 (ibid.); see titles COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 299 et seq.; CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 380 et seq.

(s) E.g., a written offer to sell goods may be verbally accepted, or a verbal offer may be accepted in writing; see Watkins v. Rymill (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 178, 188. So, again, goods may be ordered by letter and supplied without further communication (Taylor v. Jones (1875), 1 C. P. D. 87); or goods may be ordered by letter with subsequent verbal alterations, and supplied accordingly (Hoadly v. M'Laine (1834), 10 Bing. 482); and see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 527. "Writing" primâ facie includes "printing, lithography, photography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form" (Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 20); see title STATUTES.

(t) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 3; see "contract of sale," defined p. 113, ante. A contract of sale may be implied from conduct (1) as an inference of fact, that is to say, when the parties really intend a sale, but do not express it in words, as, for example, when a man takes up an article in a shop and pays for it, or otherwise appropriates it with the consent of the owner; or where an unsigned contract is acted on by the parties according to its terms (Brogden v. Metropolitan Rail. Co. (1877), 2 App. Cas. 666): in such cases there is in fact "an understanding between the parties," which may be called an implied contract (Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 234, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 249); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 334, 463 et seq.; or (2) as an inference of law; "In such a case the law does not require an actual agreement, but implies a contract from the circumstances; in fact, the law itself makes the contract" (Gore v. Gibson (1845), 13 M. & W. 623, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 626; and see Rumsey v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1863), 14 C. B. (N. S.) 641 (contract implied against express intention)); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 334. As to the case of a party so conducting himself as to be precluded from denying that he intended to be a buyer or seller, as the case may be, see p. 124, ante. Again, a new contract may be implied by law from acts done in part performance of a contract of sale, as, for example, where the buyer retains part of the goods delivered (Hart v. Mills (1846), 15 M. & W. 85; Bartholomew v. Markwick (1863), 15 C. B. (N. S.) 711 (repudiation of a contract by buyer); Oxendale v. Wetherell (1829), 9 B. & C. 386; Mavor v. Pyne (1825), 3 Bing. 285 (contract not performable within a year); Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1); see p. 212, post, or has consumed the goods before a valuation of the price (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 9; see p. 148, post). For quasi-contracts, see p. 122, ante; as to implied contracts generally, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 334, 463 et seq. For various forms of contract for the sale of goods, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 575—609, Vol. XVI., p. 558.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Construction.

SECT. 2.

Formalities of the Contract.

Interpreted like other contracts.

233. A contract of sale reduced into writing must be construed and given effect to like any other written contract (u).

In both written and verbal contracts any right, duty, or liability which would arise under a contract of sale by implication of law may be negatived or varied by express agreement, or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by usage, if the usage be such as to bind both parties to the contract (v).

SECT. 3.—*Contracts for £10 or Upwards.*SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

234. A contract for the sale (w) of any goods (x) of the value of £10 or upwards is not enforceable by action (y) unless the buyer accepts (a) part of the goods so sold and actually receives the same, or gives something in earnest (b) to bind the contract, or in part payment (b); or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract is made and signed (c) by the party to be charged or his agent (d) in that behalf (e).

Statutory formalities.

(u) Coddington v. Paleologo (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 193, 200; compare Honck v. Muller (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 92, 103, C. A. The ordinary rules also with regard to the admissibility of oral evidence apply; see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 509 et seq.; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 433 et seq.; EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., pp. 566 et seq. An invoice is not per se a written contract: it is only evidence of a contract, and may be contradicted according to the fact (Holding v. Elliott (1860), 5 H. & N. 117).

(v) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; see p. 279, post. See also titles CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 260 et seq.; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 442, commenting on the maxims expressum facit cessare tacitum and expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

(w) See p. 113, ante. For the distinction between contracts of sale and contracts for work and labour, see note (o), p. 113, ante; title WORK AND LABOUR.

(x) See p. 112, ante.

(c) As to signature, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 375 et seq. As to writing, see note (s), p. 126, ante. The contract must be complete at the time the memorandum is made (Munday v. Asprey (1880), 13 Ch. D. 855).

(e) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (1). The assimilation of the language of ibid. to that of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, makes it clear that the rule is part of the lex fori (Leroux v. Brown (1852), 12 C. B. 801). The defence that these provisions have not been complied with must be specially pleaded, both in the High Court and county court (Brutton v. Branson, [1898] 2 Q. B. 219). As to second actions on the contract after waiver of the defence in the first, see Humphries v. Humphries, [1910] 2 K. B. 531, C. A., under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4. As to the variation of an enforceable contract by the addition or substitution of new terms, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 373, 422, 424; and, as to its express or implied rescission, see ibid., pp. 373, 422, 423.

SECT. 3.
Contracts for £10 or Upwards.

These provisions apply to every such contract notwithstanding that the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time, or may not at the time of such contract be actually made, procured, or provided, or fit or ready for delivery (f); or that some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof, or rendering them fit or ready for delivery (g).

Contracts
included.

235. A contract of sale within the meaning of the aforesaid provisions includes (h)—

(1) an entire contract for the sale of goods, and for other objects, where the goods are of the value of £10 or upwards (i);

(2) an entire contract for the sale of goods of unascertained value at the date of the contract, which are afterwards ascertained to be of the value of £10 or upwards (k);

(3) an entire contract for the sale of a quantity of goods, whether all are in existence or not, each being under the value of £10, but collectively of the value of £10 or upwards (l).

Promise to re-sell.

A promise by the buyer to resell the goods to the seller, forming part of an entire and enforceable contract for the sale of the goods to the buyer, is not a contract which requires any further formalities for its enforcement (m).

Effect of Statute of Frauds, s. 4.

236. A contract of sale complying with the above requirements must, if it constitutes an agreement which is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof (n), or forms part of an entire contract, the consideration for which is an interest in or concerning land (o), also comply with the Statute of Frauds (p).

(f) I.e., "future goods"; see p. 120, ante.

237. An acceptance may precede, be contemporaneous with or subsequent to an actual receipt (q).

The question whether there has been an acceptance or an actual receipt is one of fact (r). The question whether evidence of acceptance or actual receipt exists is one of law (s).

238. Acceptance and actual receipt of a sample of the goods is an acceptance and actual receipt of part of the goods, if the sample is taken as part of the bulk, but not otherwise (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Acceptance.

239. There is an acceptance (u) of goods, where the buyer does any act (v) in relation to the goods which recognises a pre-existing (w) contract of sale, whether there be an acceptance in performance of the contract or not (x).

It is therefore not necessary that the act done by the buyer should amount to an admission of any particular terms of the (u) I.e., within the meaning of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4; this qualification is necessary, as acceptance in performance under ibid., s. 35, is distinguishable; see p. 230, post.

(v) Intimation in words of an acceptance, without any act, would seem to be ineffectual under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, though it is otherwise under ibid., s. 35 (Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, supra, per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 103).

(w) Cusack v. Robinson, supra, where it was held that an agreement to buy specific goods was at the same time an acceptance, would seem to be no longer authoritative on this point; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (3).

(x) Ibid.; Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, supra. Up to the time of the decision in Kibble v. Gough (1878), 38 L. T. 204, C. A., at any rate in the earlier cases, an acceptance was considered to be an acceptance of the goods, although such acceptance might be revoked (Morton v. Tibbett (1850), 15 Q. B. 428). A rejection of the goods was therefore material to show that there was no acceptance. This view prevailed even as late as Taylor v. Smith, [1893] 2 Q. B. 65, C. A. In Kibble v. Gough, supra, it was first decided that a rejection of the goods was not inconsistent with other acts by the buyer in admission of the contract, constituting an acceptance under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17. Kibble v. Gough, supra, was followed by Page v. Morgan, supra, both cases defining acceptance in terms now adopted by the Act. Many of the cases before Kibble v. Gough, supra, may therefore be considered as obsolete (see the judgments in Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, supra), and the authority of others is doubtful.

contract, or of their due performance by the seller (a). Accordingly, an act done by way of, or accompanying, a rejection of the goods may amount to an acceptance (b).

An act done by way of acceptance may be ineffectual if it be done against the consent of the seller (c).

Particular instances.

240. In particular an acceptance takes place (d)—

(1) where the buyer examines the goods, or takes a sample

(a) See the definition of acceptance, p. 129, ante; Tomkinson v. Staight (1856), 17 C. B. 697.

(b) As being an act done "in relation to the goods which recognises a pre-existing contract of sale" (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (3)).

(c) Taylor v. Wakefield (1856), 6 E. & B. 765; Smith v. Hudson (1865), 6 B. & S. 431; Crosby v. Wadsworth (1805), 6 East, 602 (Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4). It has been so decided with regard to payment (Davis v. Phillips, Mills & Co. (1907), 24 T. L. R. 4), and the effect of acceptance is the same; compare, however, Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, [1901] 1 K. B. 774, per BIGHAM, J., at p. 779, where the learned judge says obiter that the verbal contract is under the Act perfectly good, whence it should follow that the buyer has a right to accept.

(d) The following cases were decided before the Act, their authority now being dependent upon whether the conduct of the buyer amounted to an act "in relation to the goods which recognises a pre-existing contract of sale." The cases in which it was held that an acceptance did not exist may not be now authoritative; those in which an acceptance was established probably are:—Acceptance: Chaplin v. Rogers (1800), 1 East, 192 (resale); Hinde v. Whitehouse (1806), 7 East, 558 (retainer of sample as part of bulk); Coleman v. Gibson (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 168 (delay in rejection of goods); Baines v. Jevons (1836), 7 C. & P. 288 (buyer's declarations as owner); *Bill v. (4) where, the goods being at the time of the contract in the buyer's possession as the seller's bailee, the buyer acts in relation thereto in a manner inconsistent with the continuance of his former possession as a bailee, so as to show that he has taken to the goods as an owner thereof (h).

241. An act done by the buyer in relation to the goods may, where it is ambiguous, be explained by a contemporaneous declaration on his part, and by the surrounding circumstances, so as to show that the act does or does not amount to the recognition of a pre-existing contract of sale (i); but if the act in itself amounts to such a recognition, its effect as an acceptance is not nullified by a statement by the buyer that he rejects the goods (k).

Smith*, [1893] 2 Q. B. 65, C. A. (mere survey of goods coupled with rejection); see on this case, Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, [1901] 1 K. B. 774, per BIGHAM, J., at p. 779.

Hecht* (1853), 8 Exch. 814; Nicholson v. Bower (1858), 1 E. & E. 172, where after examination the goods were rejected, seem to be no longer law; and Taylor v. Smith, supra, does not seem to be reconcilable with the principles laid down in Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, supra.

(f) Bill v. Bament (1841), 9 M. & W. 36, per PARKE, B., at p. 37.

(g) Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, supra (attempted resale); Parker v. Wallis (1865), 5 E. & B. 21 (spreading out seed thinly). The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (3), seems to imply that an act amounting to an acceptance under ibid., s. 35, is also an acceptance under ibid., s. 4; see p. 230, post. For example the passive conduct of the buyer, which amounts to an acceptance under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 35, such as silence and delay in rejection of the goods after delivery, would probably be sufficient. But there may be acts recognising a pre-existing contract of sale which do not constitute an acceptance in performance.

(l) It is submitted that sending written instructions to the seller to deal with the goods may be an act of acceptance by the buyer himself. There is no modern decided case on the proposition in the text, but it is submitted that the analogy of agency to sign a memorandum applies (Wright v. Dannah (1809), 2 Camp. 203; Farebrother v. Simmons (1822), 5 B. & Ald.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Actual Receipt.

243. An actual receipt of the goods by the buyer takes place when there is a delivery of the goods to or into the control (m) of the buyer so as to divest the seller's right of lien in respect thereof (n).

Where the goods are, at the time of the contract, in the possession 333; Sharman v. Brandt (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 720, Ex. Ch.); and see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 152, note (d).

(m) There may be an actual receipt although the sheriff holds the actual custody of the goods (Union Bank of London v. Lenanton (1878), 47 L. J. (EX.) 409, C. A.).

(n) Baldev v. Parker (1823), 2 B. & C. 37, per HOLROYD, J., at p. 44; Bill v. Bament (1841), 9 M. & W. 36; Cusack v. Robinson (1861), 1 B. & S. 299, per curiam. As to the divesting of the lien, see pp. 244 et seq., post. Illustrations of actual receipt are Cooper v. Elston (1796), 7 Term Rep. 14 (delivery of sample not as part of bulk); Hinde v. Whitehouse (1806), 7 East, 558 (sample delivered as part of bulk); Howe v. Palmer (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 321 (goods set aside for buyer, but no actual delivery); Baldev v. Parker, supra (buyer's refusal to receive); Phillips v. Bistolli (1824), 2 B. & C. 511 (temporary detention of goods sold at auction); Bentall v. Burn (1824), 3 B. & C. 423 (mere acceptance by buyer of delivery order no actual receipt); Proctor v. Jones (1826), 2 C. & P. 532 (marking goods with buyer's initials, but no actual delivery); Holderness v. Shackels (1828), 8 B. & C. 612 (same); Maberley v. Sheppard (1833), 10 Bing. 99 (work done by buyer on unfinished chattel: no actual delivery); Smith v. Surman (1829), 9 B. & C. 561 (directions by buyer as to cutting of timber sold, and offer of resale: no actual delivery); compare Tansley v. Turner (1835), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 151 (timber on land of third person put at buyer's disposal); and Marshall v. Green (1875), 1 C. P. D. 35 (timber on third person's land cut by buyer and resold); Dodsley v. Varley (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 632 (special right of seller after delivery analogous to lien); Bill v. Bament, supra (goods to be paid for on delivery: no actual delivery); Farina v. Home (1846), 16 M. & W. 119 (transfer to buyer of warrant without attornment of wharfinger); Simonds v. Fisher (1850), cited in Gardner v. Grout (1857), 2 C. B. (N. S.) 340 (delivery of samples not as part of bulk); Gardner v. Grout, supra (sample delivered as part of bulk); Hunt v. Hecht (1853), 8 Exch. 814 (delivery to wharfinger by buyer's authority); Baylis v. Lundy (1861), 4 L. T. 176 (attornment of warehouseman to buyer); Kershaw v. Ogden (1865), 3 H. & C. 717 (loading in buyer's cart); Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, [1895] 2 Q. B. 97, C. A. (delivery by seller's lighterman of receiving note to buyer). Where the seller agrees to hold the goods as the buyer's bailee, some doubt may exist how far the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (2) (see p. 243, post), which preserves the lien in such a case, has modified the law as to actual receipt. Where, at the time of the attornment, no right of lien exists, the attornment seems to amount to an actual receipt, for the fact that the lien may afterwards revive is immaterial (Castle v. Swoorder (1861), 6 H. & N. 828, Ex. Ch., per WILLIAMS, J., at p. 834); but where there is a lien at the time, the case seems to be doubtful. At common law, however, an attornment ipso facto divested the lien, which revived on the buyer's insolvency only; see note (d), p. 243, post. The cases on attornment are Elmore v. Stone (1809), 1 Taunt. 458 (horse sold left at livery with seller); Tempest v. Fitzgerald (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 680; Carter v. Toussaint (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 855 (ready money bargain: no waiver of lien); Re Tate, Ex parte Moffatt (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 170 (goods by custom left with seller in pledge); Baumont v. Brengeri (1847), 5 C. B. 301 (carriage: buyer's acts of ownership); Holmes v. Hoskins (1854), 9 Exch. 753 (ready money bargain), following Tempest v. Fitzgerald, supra; Marvin v. Wallis (1856), 6 E. & B. 726 (seller borrows horse after sale); Farrer v. Kirkby (1888), 4 T. L. R. 543 (horse left in stable of third person); Re Roberts, Evans v. Roberts (1887), 36 Ch. D. 196 (mere continuance of seller's possession); Nicholls v. White (1910), 103 L. T. 800 (stack of hay on seller's land: seller's admission of attornment).

of the buyer as the seller's bailee, the same acts of the buyer which constitute an acceptance of the goods also constitute an actual receipt thereof (o).

244. A delivery of the goods to a carrier, or other agent for the transmission of the goods to the buyer, is an actual receipt of the goods by the buyer by his agent the carrier (p), except where the seller reserves the right of disposal (a); but such a delivery is not an acceptance of the goods by the buyer, the carrier or such other agent not being the buyer's agent for acceptance (b).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Earnest and Part Payment.

245. "Earnest" means a coin, or something valuable, given by the buyer to the seller to signify the conclusion of the bargain (c). The thing given does not lose its character of earnest because the parties may agree that it shall afterwards form part of the price (d).

Earnest.

Part payment must be made by some act independent of, or under an agreement collateral to, the contract sought to be enforced. It is not sufficient that it should depend upon a term of the verbal contract itself (e). Subject thereto, part payment may be made in any way which constitutes payment (f); but it must be accepted by the seller (g).

Part payment.

(o) Lillywhite v. Devereux (1846), 15 M. & W. 285, following Edan v. Dudfield (1841), 1 Q. B. 302. As to acceptance, see pp. 129 et seq., ante.

(p) Smith v. Hudson (1865), 6 B. & S. 431, per BLACKBURN, J.; Taylor v. Smith, [1893] 2 Q. B. 65, C. A., per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C. But the goods on delivery to the carrier must be in accordance with the contract, otherwise there is no actual receipt (Gorman v. Boddy (1845), 2 Car. & Kir. 145). As to delivery to a carrier, see, further, p. 222, post.

(a) On principle, there being no delivery; see, p. 222, post.

(b) Smith v. Hudson, supra, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 448; Hanson v. Armitage (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 557 (wharfinger); Hart v. Bush (1858), E. B. & E. 494 (wharfinger); Taylor v. Smith, supra, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at p. 70. Quære whether an order in writing by the buyer to the carrier to receive the goods from the seller would not be an acceptance by the buyer himself, as being an act recognising a pre-existing contract; see p. 129, ante.

(c) Thus a ring may be given (Vinnius on Justinian's Institutes, Bk. 3, tit. 24), or a coin (Bach v. Owen (1793), 5 Term Rep. 409; Goodall v. Skelton (1794), 2 Hy. Bl. 316). The thing must be given. "Striking the bargain," i.e., drawing a coin across the hand of the seller and taking it back, is insufficient (Blenkinsop v. Clayton (1817), 7 Taunt. 597). Further, it must be intended to bind the contract (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (1)); the mere delivery of something in the course of the execution of the contract, such as bags sent by the buyer to be filled, is not the giving of earnest (Sumner and Leivesley v. Brown (John) & Co. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 745).

(d) Soper v. Arnold (1889), 14 App. Cas. 429, per Lord MACNAGHTEN; Hall v. Burnell, [1911] 2 Ch. 551; see the history of earnest and deposit stated by FRY, L.J., in Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch. D. 89, C. A., and the subject considered in relation to the civil law in Benjamin, Sale of Personal Property, 2nd ed., p. 146; 5th ed., p. 228.

(e) Thus, a term in a verbal contract that an antecedent debt due by the seller (Walker v. Nussey (1847), 16 M. & W. 302), or that a sum overpaid to him on a previous sale (Norton v. Davison, [1899] 1 Q. B. 401, C. A.), shall be set off against the price is not a part payment, as it does not independently recognise the verbal contract.

(f) As to payment, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 444, 446; p. 233, post.

(ii.) Sufficiency of the Memorandum.

248. Any writing (p) embodying the terms of the contract, and signed (q) by the party to be charged, or his agent, is sufficient as a note or memorandum (r). The writing must therefore, either expressly or by necessary implication, contain—

(1) the names (s) or of description (t) sufficient to identify the parties in their respective characters (a);

(n) Submitted on general principles; see Pearce v. Gardner, [1897] 1 Q. B. 688, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R.

Kirk* (1839), 2 Mood. & R. 221 (seller's invoice and buyer's letter); Peirce v. Corf (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 210 (sales ledger, catalogue, and conditions of sale); Kenworthy v. Schofield (1824), 2 B. & C. 945 (catalogue and conditions of sale); Taylor v. Smith, [1893] 2 Q. B. 65, C. A. (invoice, carrier's advice note, and buyer's letter); as to letter and envelope, see Pearce v. Gardner, supra. See the law stated by WILLIAMS, J., in North Staffordshire Rail. Co. v. Peck (1860), E. B. & E. 986, Ex. Ch., at p. 1000. As to the admissibility in general of parol evidence in connexion with writings, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 369, 370, 523 et seq.

(p) See note (s), p. 126, ante.

(q) As to what amounts to a signature, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 375; Brooks v. Billingham (1912), 56 Sol. Jo. 503 (name not subscribed, when sufficient).

(r) Thus, a recital in a will is sufficient (Re Hoyle, Hoyle v. Hoyle, [1893] 1 Ch. 84, C. A.), or an affidavit (Barkworth v. Young (1856), 4 Drew. 1), a letter to a third party (Gibson v. Holland (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 1), or an entry in a diary (Re Hoyle, Hoyle v. Hoyle, supra, per SMITH, L.J., at p. 100). So also, e.g., a receipt (Evans v. Prothero (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 572), a bill of parcels (Schneider v. Norris (1814), 2 M. & S. 286), or a telegram (McBlain v. Cross (1871), 25 L. T. 804; Godwin v. Francis (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 295); see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 367. It is noticeable that, like the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), speaks, not of a written contract, but of a memorandum of a verbal one. The former is of course not excluded; see Law Quarterly Review, Vol. I., p. 17, n. (4).

T. 768 (seller's name on cover of order book); Re Cox, McEuen & Co. and Hoare, Marr & Co. (1907), 96 L. T. 719, C. A. The name of an agent as a contracting party is sufficient, and the undisclosed principal may be identified by parol (Higgins v. Senior (1841), 8 M. & W. 834; Filby v. Hounsell, [1896] 2 Ch. 737; Calder v. Dobell (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 486, Ex. Ch.); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 377; and compare note (t), infra. But parol evidence is not admissible to discharge the agent (Higgins v. Senior, supra). As to the liability of agents on contracts generally, see title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 206 et seq., 219 et seq.

Hunter* (1886), 34 Ch. D. 182. Parol evidence is admissible to apply the description given to the party; knowledge by one party of the identity of the other is insufficient (Jarrett v. Hunter, supra). Whether the word "principal" may be shown by parol evidence to mean a particular principal is doubtful; see and compare Cropper v. Cook (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 194, with Rossiter v. Miller, supra; and see note (s), supra.

249. Where a contract of sale is not verbal, but is wholly in writing, the written contract is a sufficient memorandum (f). In such case, other documents passing between the parties are to be disregarded, except that the acceptance by the parties of documents subsequently passing between them is relevant to show a new contract in the terms of such documents (g).

250. A note or memorandum need only show the terms of the contract; it need not show on its face the mutual assent of the parties thereto (h). Thus, a written proposal signed by the party to be charged, verbally accepted (i), is sufficient. But the SUB-SECT. 6.—Agency for Signature.

(i.). In General.

251. The authority of an agent (m) to sign a memorandum need not be given in writing. It may be given in any way in which authority is conferred by law on an agent, and may be constituted by subsequent ratification (n). Authority, how given.

An agent having authority to enter into a contract of sale has the implied authority of his principal to make and sign a memorandum thereof (o).

Watts v. Ainsworth (1862), 1 H. & C. 83. By parity of reasoning a written acceptance containing all the terms of a verbal proposal would be sufficient.

(k) Gibson v. Holland (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 1; Re Queensland Land and Coal Co., Davis v. Martin (1894), 71 L. T. 115, per NORTH, J., at p. 118. Thus, the language of the document must not negative the fact of a contract (Re Cox, McEuen & Co. and Hoare, Marr & Co. (1907), 96 L. T. 719, C. A.); nor must the document signed set up any new term, so as to leave the terms of the contract in doubt (Cooper v. Smith (1812), 15 East, 103; Richards v. Porter (1827), 6 B. & C. 437 (condition as to time set up); Smith v. Surman (1829), 9 B. & C. 561; Archer v. Baynes (1850), 5 Exch. 625 (condition as to quality); Haughton v. Morton (1855), 5 L. C. L. R. 329 (condition of goods arriving); Caregan v. Richards (1866), 15 L. T. 252 (sale by sample set up)); compare Jackson v. Lowe (1822), 1 Bing. 9 (no conflict as to terms, but quality of goods complained of); Buxton v. Rust (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 279, Ex. Ch. (defendant puts wrong interpretation on admitted terms).

Jo. 503 (defendant's dictation of memorandum); see, generally, titles AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 156, 157; CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 377—379; as to appointment of agents generally, see title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 153 et seq. The authority cannot be delegated (Henderson v. Barnewall (1827), 1 Y. & J. 387; Bell v. Balls, [1897] 1 Ch. 663); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 379. But a special authority may be conferred by the person employing the agent on the agent's agent (Bird v. Boulter (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 443; Sims v. Landray, [1894] 2 Ch. 318 (auctioneer's clerk); Godwin v. Francis (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 295 (telegraph company's clerk)). Whether the authority of an agent is revocable after the contract, up to the time when the memorandum is made, seems to be doubtful; see in the affirmative, Farmer v. Robinson (1805), 2 Camp. 339, n.; Warwick v. Slade (1811), 3 Camp. 127 (broker); but compare Bell v. Balls, supra, per STIRLING, J.; Van Praagh v. Everidge, [1902] 2 Ch. 266 (auctioneers); and title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 230 et seq.

(o) Rosenbaum v. Belson, [1900] 2 Ch. 267; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 378. A signature by an agent purporting to be made by him as a witness is valid, if the signature be intended to authenticate the document, and not merely to attest another signature (Wallace v. Roe, [1903] 1 I. R. 32); see also Gosbell v. Archer (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 500; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 379.

252. One party to the contract cannot be the agent of the other to make and sign a memorandum on his behalf (p). But one party may confer authority on the agent of the other party to do so (q). But no such authority will be inferred where the acts done by the other party's agent are not inconsistent with agency merely for his own principal (r).

253. It is not necessary that the agent should be authorised to sign a record of the contract as such. An authority to sign a document which in fact constitutes, or incorporates, a note or memorandum of the terms of the contract is sufficient (s).

(ii.) Brokers.

254. A broker for sale is a person making it a trade to find buyers for those who wish to sell, and sellers for those who wish to buy, and to negotiate and superintend the making of the bargain between them (t). His duty is to establish privity of contract between the seller and the buyer (a).

255. A usage of trade that, on a sale on credit through a broker to a buyer whose name has not previously been communicated to the seller, the seller may, within a reasonable time after the receipt of the sold note, object to the sufficiency of the buyer, and repudiate the contract, is reasonable and valid (b).

D. 20; Re Hoyle, Hoyle v. Hoyle, [1893] 1 Ch. 84, C. A. But the signature of an agent merely to approve the form of a document, such as a solicitor who approves a draft, is insufficient (*Bowen v. A broker is a special agent, and must duly act within the limits of his authority (Pitts v. Beckett (1845), 13 M. & W. 743, per PARKE, B., at p. 747). When he has executed his authority it is exhausted; he cannot cancel the contract and make another (White v. Benekendorff (1873), 29 L. T. 475, per BRETT, J., at p. 477). 256. A broker employed by a principal to buy or sell is the agent of that principal to make and sign on his behalf a memorandum of the contract (c); by dealing with the broker as a broker (d) the other party to the contract is deemed, on the conclusion of the bargain, to authorise him to make a memorandum on that other party's behalf (e).

The position of the party bargaining with the broker is in fact similar to that of a buyer at an auction with respect to the auctioneer after the fall of the hammer (Rucker v. Cammeyer, supra). The dealing gives the authority. See the law well stated by BIGELOW, C.J., in Coddington v. Goddard (1860), 82 Massachusetts Reports, 436, at p. 445, and by the Court in Remick v. Sandford (1875), 118 Massachusetts Reports, 102. The broker being a special agent must of course enter the actual contract made, not one in different terms (*Pitts v. Rules as to brokers' books and notes.

A usage of trade or course of dealing to contract by two notes is relevant, but not conclusive, to disprove a common intention to contract by one note (k).

259. With respect to brokers' books and bought and sold notes the following rules apply:—

(1) Where the broker enters the terms of the contract in a broker's book, and signs the entry, and also delivers to the parties bought and sold notes, the entry in the book perhaps constitutes a contract in writing to the exclusion of the notes (l);

(2) The acceptance by the parties of bought and sold notes is relevant to show a new contract in the terms of the notes (m);

(3) A signed and sufficient entry in a broker's book of the terms of a verbal contract is a good memorandum thereof (n);

(4) Where there is no entry of the terms of the contract in a broker's book, or it is unsigned, or insufficient, the bought and sold notes, if they correspond with one another (o), and are sufficient, constitute a contract in writing, or are a good memorandum of a (k) See note (b), p. 138, ante; note (i), p. 139, ante.

(l) Such was the opinion of three judges in Sievewright v. Archibald (1851), 17 Q. B. 103; of PARKE, B., in Thornton v. Charles (1842), 9 M. & W. 802, and Pitts v. Beckett (1845), 13 M. & W. 743, 746; and of Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Heyman v. Neale (1807), 2 Camp. 337, and Dickenson v. Lilwal (1815), 1 Stark. 128. That the contract was contained in the notes was the opinion of GIBBS, C.J., in Cumming v. Roebuck (1816), Holt (N. P.), 172; of ABBOTT, C.J., in Thornton v. Meux (1827), Mood. & M. 43 (revoking his contrary opinion in Grant v. Fletcher (1826), 5 B. & C. 436, and Goom v. Aflalo (1826), 6 B. & C. 117); of Lord DENMAN, C.J., in Hawes v. Forster (1834), 1 Mood. & R. 368, and Townend v. Drakeford (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 20; of Lord ABINGER, C.B., in Thornton v. Charles, supra; and of the court in Richey v. Garvey (1847), 10 I. L. R. 544. Moreover the report of Hawes v. Forster, supra, seems to show that the jury found that by usage the notes were considered as the contract; but this case has been otherwise explained; see per PARKE, B., in Thornton v. Charles, supra. It must be remembered that, up to the date of Sievewright v. Archibald, supra, and to the year 1884, it was the duty of a broker in the city of London to enter the terms of the contract in his book (a duty which no longer exists), and stress was laid upon this fact in many of the cases. The custom of making an entry has become largely obsolete. At the present day it may perhaps be a question of fact in each case whether the entry or the notes be intended by the parties as the contract, so as to be conclusive between them. It seems to be difficult to attribute the effect of a written contract to a private act of the broker, and one, moreover, not made under any legal obligation. Thirty-five years after Sievewright v. Archibald, supra, no special efficacy was attributed to the entry in the book; see Thompson v. Gardiner (1876), 1 C. P. D. 777; see also title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 351.

(n) Thompson v. Gardiner, supra; Thornton v. Charles, supra, per PARKE, B.; Richey v. Garvey, supra; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 351.

(o) It is not a variance because one of the parties is named in one note and only described in the other (Cropper v. Cook (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 194; Trueman v. Loder (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 589). Parol evidence may be given to explain any apparent discrepancy, so as to show that it is not material (Bold v. Rayner (1836), 1 M. & W. 343), e.g., to show that the discrepancy is a mere memorandum of the broker, and not a term of the contract (Kempson v. Boyle (1865), 3 H. & C. 763); see also Maclean v. Dunn (1828), verbal contract (p). If they do not correspond, or are insufficient, and no other written evidence of the contract is shown, no written contract or memorandum is proved (q);

(5) Where bought and sold notes are delivered by a broker, being agent of both parties, either note, being sufficient, is by itself proof of a contract in writing, or is a good memorandum of a verbal contract, in the absence of proof by the party to be charged that the other note differs (r).

260. A material alteration in a broker's note, made by or at the instance of either party without the consent of the other, vitiates the note as a written contract, or memorandum of a verbal contract, as against the other party (s).

261. On the fulfilment of any of the statutory conditions, the contract becomes enforceable by action (t); but the conditions must be fulfilled before action is brought (a).

In this case the buyer declared on the note in its original form. An alteration by one party may be material although it does not alter the duty to be performed by the other party (ibid.). If the broker, at the instance of the seller, materially alters the sold note, he cannot recover from the buyer, as money paid, the price paid by him to the seller (White v. Benekendorff (1873), 29 L. T. 475 (alteration of time of delivery)); see the whole subject considered in the notes to Master v. Miller (1793), 1 Smith, L. contract must, as in all cases, be proved by evidence, oral or written (c).

The effect of a note or memorandum is to make enforceable the contract set up by the party relying upon the memorandum, by showing the parties to, and the substantial terms of, the contract (d). Accordingly, the party seeking to charge the other cannot supplement the memorandum by oral evidence of terms not contained therein (e); but it is competent to the party sought to be charged to invalidate it by giving oral evidence to show that it is not a memorandum of any completed contract at all (f), or does not contain all the substantial terms (g), or not the real terms (h), of the contract entered into.

(1850), 15 Q. B. 428, per Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.; "The object of the statute is that, where there was no contract in writing, there must be some overt act to render the bargain binding" (Kibble v. Gough (1878), 38 L. T. 204, C. A., per COTTON, L.J., at p. 206).

(d) Of course, if the writing is intended to be the contract itself, as distinguished from a memorandum of a verbal contract, it must be proved, whether the case is within the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, or not, or whether or not that provision has been satisfied by an acceptance etc.

(h) Rogers v. Hadley (1863), 2 H. & C. 227. As to the admissibility generally of verbal evidence in relation to written documents, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 373, 523 et seq.

(i) For the definition of action, see p. 118, ante. As to account stated, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 489—493. It was decided before the Act that, on a verbal contract for the sale of an interest in land, such as growing timber, the price might be recovered by the seller on an account stated after the contract is executed by the delivery of the timber or other interest (Knowles v. Michel (1811), 13 East, 249; Seago v. Deane (1828), 4 Bing. 459 (price of repairs done by incoming tenant); Cocking v. Ward (1845), 1 C. B. 858 (money payable for surrender of lease); secus, if the account was stated before delivery (Falmouth (Earl) v. Thomas (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 89 (growing crops)). As timber etc. to be severed now generally falls under the definition of "goods" (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); p. 112, ante), a resort to an account stated will no longer be necessary, as the delivery would satisfy ibid., s. 4. But the principle of the authorities cited would probably apply where the subject-matter of the sale, though ultimately to become a chattel, is not at the time of the contract "goods" within the definition, as in Morgan v. Russell & Sons, [1909] 1 K. B. 357 (slag and cinders to be removed from land by buyer an interest in land). As to interests in land generally, see titles EASEMENTS AND PROFITS à PRENDRE, Vol. XI., p. 237; LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 338, note (c), 372, note (d); MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 647; MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 74; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 157, note (r).

does not displace (k) any remedy other than by action (l), nor the proof of the contract for any collateral purpose (m).

263. Whether a contract of sale, not enforceable by action, is nevertheless effectual to pass the property in the goods to the buyer is doubtful (n). If the property does not pass by the contract, the buyer cannot, by satisfying the statutory provisions, vest in himself retrospectively a right of action dependent on the right of property (o).

SECT. 3.

Upwards.

Effect on property of unenforce-

(k) As to the effect and scope of the provisions of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 361—383; and see note (i), p. 142, ante. Where the facts admit, the decisions under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, are applicable under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4.

(l) Philpott v. Jones (1834), 2 Ad. & El. 41 (appropriation by creditor of payment to an unenforceable debt). A seller, who is the buyer's executor, cannot, however, retain an unenforceable debt for goods sold (Re Rownson, Field v. White (1885), 29 Ch. D. 358, C. A.). Nor can the buyer's executor pay the seller the price under an unenforceable contract (ibid.). Such payments are devastavit. The case of the retainer of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations is not analogous (ibid.).

(m) Pullbrook v. Lawes (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 284, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 289; see also the language of Lord SELBORNE, L.C., with regard to the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, in Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, at p. 476. Thus, the contract may be looked at to show that acts done by the buyer were done by the seller's licence, so as to excuse a trespass (Carrington v. Roots (1837), 2 M. & W. 248), or that the buyer has "agreed to buy" under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9 (Hugill v. Masker (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 364, C. A.), or to negative the implication of any other contract (Britain v. Rossiter (1879), 11 Q. B. D. 123, C. A.), or to show that its performance was an accord and satisfaction of a liability under another contract (Lavery v. Turley (1860), 6 H. & N. 239). If the goods are to be paid for by moneys to be received from a third person, and the buyer receives such moneys, it is conceived that the contract may be looked at to show that the buyer receives the money to the use of the seller, according to the principle of Griffith v. Young (1810), 12 East, 513.

(n) Decisions in the negative under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17, are: Alexander v. Comber (1788), 1 Hy. Bl. 20 (trover against seller); Stockdale v. Dunlop (1840), 6 M. & W. 224 (insurable interest); Coats v. Chaplin (1842), 3 Q. B. 483; Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1, per curiam; Coombs v. Bristol and Exeter Rail. Co. (1858), 3 H. & N. 510 (actions against carriers); Nicholson v. Bower (1858), 1 E. & E. 172 (feigned issue to determine property); Felthouse v. Bindley (1862), 11 C. B. (N. S.) 869 (trover against auctioneer); Smith v. Hudson (1865), 6 B. & S. 431 (trover against seller); Re Roberts, Evans v. Roberts (1887), 36 Ch. D. 196 (memorandum is an "assurance of personal chattels"). In the affirmative is the changed wording of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), which substitutes "not enforceable by action" for "not allowed to be good" in the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17; and the dictum of BIGHAM, J., in Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, [1901] 1 K. B. 774, at p. 779, where the learned judge says that the verbal contract is good for all purposes, including the passing of the property. It is, however, conceived that difficulties would arise in this view in the case of actions against third persons. Would the buyer, for instance, be able to recover for the loss of the goods under an insurance, although he was not liable to be sued for the price of the goods?

SECT. 4.

Subject-matter of the Contract.

Goods, existing or future.

SECT. 4.—Subject-matter of the Contract.

264. The goods which form the subject of a contract of sale may be either existing goods, owned or possessed by the seller, or goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract of sale, hereinafter called "future goods" (p).

There may be a contract for the sale of goods the acquisition of which by the seller depends on a contingency which may or may not happen (q).

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 5 (1); see ibid., s. 62 (1); p. 120, ante; Garbutt v. Watson (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 613 (flour to be ground from wheat); Watts v. Friend (1830), 10 B. & C. 446 (crop not yet sown); Wilks v. Atkinson (1815), 6 Taunt. 11; Langton v. Higgins (1859), 4 H. & N. 402 (oil to be made from seed); Pinner v. Arnold (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 613 (machine to be made); Hibblewhite v. M'Morine (1839), 5 M. & W. 462 (shares to be acquired by purchase by seller); followed in Mortimer v. M'Callan (1840), 6 M. & W. 58; 7 M. & W. 20 (stock to be purchased); Gurr v. Scudds (1855), 11 Exch. 190 (manure to be produced by horses); Ajello v. Worsley, [1898] 1 Ch. 274 (piano to be purchased of a rival maker). Although there may be a contract of sale of future goods, it is of course necessary that a sale should be intended, and not a wager, as, e.g., on differences of price at a future date, with no intention that the goods shall be delivered (Grizewood v. Blane (1851), 11 C. B. 526; Thacker v. Hardy (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 685, C. A.).

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 5 (2); Howell v. Coupland (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 258, C. A. (potatoes to be grown: failure of crop); Watts v. Friend, supra (turnip seed to be grown: crop produced). As a contract of sale may be absolute or conditional (see p. 113, ante), the result is that, if the contingent event does not happen, the terms of the particular contract determine the effect on the liabilities of the parties. They may expressly or by implication stipulate (1) that the contract shall be conditional on the part of the seller only, the price being payable in any event (Covas v. Bingham (1853), 2 E. & B. 836), or (2) that the contract shall be absolute on the part of the seller, who shall be liable in damages if the buyer does not get the goods (Splidt v. Heath (1809), 2 Camp. 57, n.; Simond v. Braddon (1857), 2 C. B. (N. S.) 324; Hale v. Rawson (1858), 4 C. B. (N. S.) 85), or (3) that the contract shall be conditional on both sides, and, if the event does not happen, both parties shall be freed from their obligations (Hayward v. Scougall (1809), 2 Camp. 56 ("hemp that may be loaded")). The parties may make what bargain they please (Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Matlos (1863), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 328; Hale v. Rawson, supra, per WILLIAMS, J., at p. 95). Where the fulfilment of the contingency on which the seller's acquisition of the goods depends is within the control of the seller, it is a question of construction whether an obligation on his part will be implied not, at any rate wilfully, to prevent its fulfilment, or whether his contract is not contingent at all (Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 488, C. A. (contract for grains to be made by seller as a brewer: contract conditional)). Where there is a contract for the sale of goods to arrive, or "on arrival," in the absence of terms creating such a warranty, the seller does not warrant the arrival of the goods, but the contract is on both sides contingent on their arrival, and when a particular ship is named, contingent both on the arrival of the ship in the ordinary course, and within the time stated, if any, and on the goods being on board; where there is a warranty that the goods are in a particular ship, the contract is subject to the single contingency of the arrival of the ship; see Boyd v. Siffkin (1809), 2 Camp. 326 (on arrival per F.); Hawes v. Humble (1809), 2 Camp. 327, n. (same); Idle v. Thornton (1812), 3 Camp. 274 (on arrival by particular ship and date); Thornton v. Simpson (1816), 6 Taunt. 556 (short arrival); Alewyn v. Pryor (1826), Ry. & M. 406 (late arrival); Lovatt v. Hamilton 265. Where the parties clearly intend it, there may be an emptio spei, that is to say, the sale and purchase of the chance of obtaining goods, rather than of the goods themselves (r). Such a contract is contingent on the part of the seller, but absolute on the part of the buyer (s).

Povah* (1907), 12 Com. Cas. 317 ("expected to arrive per sailer from F.": contract mutually abandoned). The contingency of the arrival of the goods will not be fulfilled by the arrival of similar goods consigned to third persons, with which the contract did not purport to deal (Gorissen v. Perrin, supra; Thornton v. Simpson (1816), 6 Taunt. 556; and compare Fischel v. Scott, supra).

Siggers* (1848), 1 Exch. 856 ("bought and sold": agreed to be bought and sold); Vickers v. Hertz (1871), 9 Macpherson (House of Lords), 65, per Lord WESTBURY, at pp. 71, 72; see "sale" and "agreement to sell" defined p. 117, ante. A man cannot sell what he has not got, but he can agree to sell property which he expects to acquire, and then, when the property is acquired, the agreement to sell attaches; as to the passing of the property in the goods, and the buyer's equitable interest therein, see p. 170, post.

(u) As by its definition "contract of sale" includes both a sale and an agreement to sell (see p. 117, ante), the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 6, applies whether the contract purports to be the one or the other. On the other hand, ibid., s. 7, applies only to agreements to sell.

has perished, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 7; note (f), infra. Probably goods may be held to have "perished" when they are so damaged as no longer to answer to the description under which they have been sold; see Barr v. Gibson (1838), 3 M. & W. 390 (stranded ship); Asfar & Co. v. Blundell, [1896] 1 Q. B. 123, C. A. (dates contaminated with sewage); Montreal Light, Heat, and Power Co. v. Sedgwick, [1910] A. C. 598, P. C. (cement turned by water into stone); Palace Shipping Co. v. Spillers (1908), Times, 18th May (wheat submerged, but good as cattle food); see also Dakin v. Oxley (1864), 15 C. B. (N. S.) 646, per curiam, and cases as to total loss cited in title INSURANCE, Vol. XVII., pp. 474, 475. If the seller knows that the goods have perished, then, by implication from the terms of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 6, and according to general principles (see Smith v. Hughes (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 597), the seller, but not the buyer, will be estopped from asserting that no contract exists. Conversely, if the buyer only knows of the loss of the goods, he, but not the seller, will be estopped from setting up a contract (ibid.; and see, generally, the Civil law (Dig. 18, 1, 57)). As the contract is void ab initio, the price, if paid, can be recovered back. It is money paid under a mistake of fact, for the contract is founded on mutual mistake (Strickland v. Turner (1852), 7 Exch. 208 (sale of annuity)); see, generally, title MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., pp. 29 et seq.

(c) For definition of "sale" and "specific goods," see pp. 117, 121, ante; and for definition of "fault," see p. 120, ante.

(d) For the meaning of "perish," see note (b), p. 145, ante.

(e) As to the passing of the risk, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20; p. 188, post. If the contract were a sale, the risk ab initio would primâ facie attach to the buyer. Some complicated questions may arise under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 7, and ibid., s. 20, where either party by his fault delays delivery. As to the case where the buyer is liable, and the goods perish before the price is fixed, see pp. 147, 235, post.

(f) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 7. This provision is an application of the general rule as to impossibility of performance, and deals with cases where the contract is not void ab initio, as under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 6, but where performance is on either side excused as from the time of the perishing of the goods. As to impossibility of performance generally, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 426 et seq.; and see ibid., p. 430, and the cases cited in ibid., note (j); compare Hayward Brothers, Ltd. v. Daniel (James) & Son (1904), 91 L. T. 319 (crops not identified as the produce of particular land); see, further, Rugg v. Minett (1809), 11 East, 210 (goods consumed by fire before property passed), as explained by Taylor v. Caldwell (1863), 3 B. & S. 826; Elphick v. Barnes (1880), 5 C. P. D. 321 (death of horse delivered within time limited for sale or return); see also Stubbs v. Holywell Rail. Co. (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 311; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 431, note (n).

Where either party is in fault, he is liable, if the seller, for non-delivery, according to the ordinary rules governing impossibility in fact; and, if the buyer, he must pay for the goods, although they are not delivered. Howell v. Coupland (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 462; affirmed (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 258, C. A., shows that the rule in Taylor v. Caldwell, supra, is not confined to sales of specific things, but is extended to sales of unascertained portions of a specific thing, where the whole bulk perishes, as, e.g., a sale of 100 tons out of a specific cargo (Howell v. Coupland, supra, per BLACKBURN, J., at pp. 465, 466); or the sale of a portion of a specific bin of wine). Quære whether, if a portion of the specific bulk remains undestroyed, the seller is wholly discharged or must deliver as much as he can. It is submitted that, the contract being primâ facie an

How fixed.

269. The price (g) in a contract of sale may be fixed by the contract, or may be left to be fixed in manner thereby agreed, or may be determined by the course of dealing between the parties (h). Where the price is not determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions the buyer must pay a reasonable price. What is a reasonable price is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each particular case (i).

270. Where the ascertainment of the price depends upon the goods being weighed, measured, tested, or counted, or upon some other act or thing being done to or in relation to them, and such act has become impossible by the perishing of the goods, the buyer, if liable to pay the price, must pay a sum reasonably estimated (k).

Price dependent on weighing etc.

271. If the ascertainment of the price involves a wager, as, for example, where there is an alternative price in the nature of a bet, the contract is void as being a gaming contract (l).

entire one for the whole quantity of the goods, the seller is probably discharged; see a somewhat similar case of Lovatt v. Hamilton (1839), 5 M. & W. 639 (goods to arrive). So again, if two specific articles are agreed to be sold under an entire contract, and one subsequently perishes, the seller is probably discharged from delivering the other; it was so, at any rate, in the Civil law (Dig. 18, 1, 44).

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 9 (1); Thurnell v. Balbirnie (1837), 2 M. & W. 786 (action for non-acceptance); Vickers v. Vickers (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 529 (action for specific performance); and compare title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The valuation cannot be delegated (Ess v. Truscott (1837), 2 M. & W. 385). Valuation is distinguished from arbitration, which is in the nature of a judicial proceeding to decide an existing dispute (Bos v. Helsham (1866), L. R. 2 Exch. 72; Re Carus-Wilson and Greene (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 7, C. A.); compare title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., pp. 440, 441. Even where a question of fixing of price is involved, there may be an arbitration, as distinguished from a mere valuation, as where different prices are offered by two parties, and a third person is to decide (Thomson v. Anderson (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 523). A valuation may be included in the term "arbitration" as used in a particular statute (Stewart v. Williamson, [1910] A. C. 455); see, further, title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., p. 440. It is conceived that the agreement is avoided, not from the time of the failure of the valuation, but ab initio, so that the buyer, if not in fault, could recover any sum paid as a deposit.

So, too, the party in fault may be restrained by injunction from preventing the valuer from acting (Smith v. Peters (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 511). For definition of "fault," see p. 120, ante. The "action for damages" seems to mean an action for preventing the valuation. Where a valuer is appointed there is no promise implied on the part of the person appointing that the valuer shall act (Cooper v. Shuttleworth (1856), 25 L. J. (EX.) 114). As to a contract that, on either party's default, the other party's valuer should value alone, see Tew v. Harris (1847), 11 Q. B. 7.

(r) Behn v. Burness (1863), 3 B. & S. 751, Ex. Ch.; Bentsen v. Taylor, Sons & Co. (2), [1893] 2-Q. B. 274, C. A.; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 521. For the distinction between guarantee and warranty, compare title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., p. 440, note (g). This is a question for the jury or, if the contract be in writing, for the court; Behn v. Burness, supra; Bentsen v. Taylor, Sons & Co. (2), supra. To form part of the contract the statement need not be made simultaneously with the conclusion of the bargain; it is sufficient that it should be "given during the course of the dealing which leads to the bargain, and should then enter into the bargain as part of it" (De Lassalle v. Guildford, [1901] 2 K. B. 215, 221, C. A.; Cowdy v. Thomas (1877), 36 L. T. 22; Mew v. Russell (1683), 2 Show. 284; Lysney v. Selby (1705), 2 Ld. Raym. 1118). It follows that representations made after the conclusion of the bargain are no part of it and require new consideration (Roscorla v. Thomas (1842), 3 Q. B. 234). Similarly, a representation made before the bargain is, except as the basis of an action of deceit (Wright v. Crookes (1840), 1 Scott (N. R.), 685), ineffectual, unless it be shown that the bargain was grounded on it (Hopkins v. Tanqueray (1854), 15 C. B. 130; Malcolm v. Cross (1898), 35 Sc. L. R. 794; compare Percival v. Oldacre (1865), 18 C. B. (N. S.) 398; Schawel v. Reade (1912), 46 I. L. T. 281, H. L.; Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, [1913] A. C. 30), or, if the bargain be committed to writing, the representation be either incorporated therein, or is shown to be part of the contract, collateral to the written terms (Lloyd (Edward), Ltd. v. Sturgeon Falls Pulp Co., Ltd. (1901), 85 L. T. 162); see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 528. In determining whether a representation be a promise, whether warranty or condition, it may be relevant to consider whether the seller asserts a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states his own opinion without special knowledge (Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, supra, per Lord Moulton, explaining De Lassalle v. Guildford, supra; and the dictum in Cave v. Coleman (1828), 3 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 2; Gee v. Lucas (1867), 16 L. T. 357 (sale catalogue describes mare as "in foal to W.")). Statements in writing, alleged to be promises, may, by the terms of the writing, be shown not to be such (Taylor v. Bullen (1850), 5 Exch. 779 (clause against "error" excluding warranty)); and see the cases on horses, infra. See also the following cases:—as to genuineness of pictures: *Jendwine v. Whether a stipulation (s) in a contract of sale is a condition, the breach of which may give rise to a right to treat the contract as repudiated, or a warranty (t), the breach of which may give rise to a claim for damages, but not to a right to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated, depends in each case on the construction of the contract (u). A stipulation may be a condition though called a warranty in the contract (a).

T. 22 ("tubes of engine are copper": warranty).

(s) The reference to damages shows that "stipulation" includes only promises, and does not include collateral contingencies beyond the control of either party, as, e.g., in sales of goods "to arrive." Such cases are governed by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 1 (2) (see note (g), p. 115, ante), and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 61 (2), saving the common law (see p. 281, post).

Legg* (1854), 9 Exch. 709; Behn v. Burness (1863), 3 B. & S. 751, Ex. Ch.; Oppenheim v. Fraser (1876), 34 L. T. 524 (sale of cargo: "ship now at Rangoon"); compare Woolfe v. Horne (1877), 2 Q. Before the Act terms relating to the quality of the goods were, in spite of judicial protests, continually referred to as warranties though they were given effect to as conditions; see, e.g., Chanter v. Hopkins (1838), 4 M. & W. 399, 404; Bannerman v. White (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 844. The Act now discriminates and provides that, though the parties may use the old language, if a term be really a condition it is to be given effect to as such (Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394, 397).

Where a contract of sale is not severable (c), and the buyer has accepted the goods or part thereof, or where the contract is for specific goods the property in which has passed to the buyer, the breach of any condition to be fulfilled by the seller can only be treated as a breach of warranty, and not as a ground for rejecting the goods and treating the contract as repudiated (d), unless there be a term of the contract, express or implied, to that effect (e).

the common law in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 61 (2) (see p. 281, post), similar considerations apply to conditions to be fulfilled by the buyer. The principle that a party may voluntarily waive a stipulation which is for his own benefit is a general rule of contract law; and it is to such a voluntary waiver that the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1) (a), seems to apply, whereas ibid., s. 11 (1) (c), refers to two specific cases of waiver compulsorily presumed by law (*Wallis, Son and Wells v. The reference to part acceptance shows that these words are not confined to cases where the subject-matter of the contract is physically one, but that they include contracts intended to be treated as unseverable. An illustration of a severable contract is one for delivery of the goods by instalments where the price of the instalments is separately payable; as to such see ibid., s. 31; p. 215, post; Simpson v. Crippin (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 14; Brandt v. Lawrence (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 344, C. A.; Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A., approving Tarling v. O'Riordan (1878), 2 L. Blay* (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 456 (specific goods); Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394. The words "treated as a breach of warranty" do not mean "become a warranty ex post facto," but that the remedy of the buyer after an acceptance of the goods, whether voluntary or compulsory, is an action of damages as if the condition were a warranty; see Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, supra, per FLETCHER MOULTON, L. J., at [1910] 2 K. B. 1015, C. A.: "The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1), does not state that a condition becomes a warranty if the goods are accepted, but only that the legal remedies for the breach of a condition become . . . limited to the single remedy which exists in the case of a warranty, namely, suing for damages. Whether an obligation is a condition or a warranty is decided . . . by the contract itself, and not by matters subsequent to the contract"; approved, S. C., [1911] A. C. 394.

281. Unless a different intention appears from the terms of the contract, stipulations as to time of payment are not deemed to be of the essence of a contract of sale (h). of America v. Pelly (1899), 15 T. L. R. 166 (delivery excused by state of war). The words "or otherwise" would seem to cover other cases than those mentioned in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1) (c), in which a waiver of a condition is compulsorily presumed by law, as where the other party has prevented its performance (Hotham v. East India Co. (1787), 1 Term Rep. 638, 645, per ASHHURST, J.; Mackay v. Dick (1881), 6 App. Cas. 251), or has rendered himself unable to perform his own part (Planché v. Colburn (1831), 8 Bing. 14), or has absolutely refused to perform it (Cort v. Ambergate, Nottingham and Boston and Eastern Junction Rail. Co. (1851), 17 Q. B. 127; Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 543, C. A. (tender excused); and see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 432 et seq. The conditions alluded to in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (3), are the conditions performable by the seller referred to in ibid., s. 11 (1). As to conditions performable by the buyer, the common law is saved by ibid., s. 61 (2).

(h) Ibid., s. 10 (1); Martindale v. Smith (1841), 1 Q. B. 389; Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434; compare the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (7). The reason is that failure in punctual payment does not go to the whole consideration for the sale. But the terms of the contract may make the time of payment an essential condition (Bishop v. Shillito (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 329, n. (passing of property); Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. v. Blaina Iron and Tinsplate Co. (1901), 6 Com. Cas. 33, C. A.; Ryan v. Ridley & Co. (1902), 8 Com. Cas. 105 (payment for each instalment); and see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 413, 522.

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 10 (1); compare the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (3), as to contracts generally. But in mercantile contracts time is usually of the essence of the contract (Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, 246, 249, C. A.; Alewyn v. Pryor (1826), Ry. & M. 406 (arrival of goods on ship); Tew v. Harris (1847), 11 Q. B. 7 (time of appointment of valuer of goods); Wimshurst v. Deeley (1845), 2 C. B. 253 (engines for ship)); compare Woolfe v. Horne (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 355 (clearance of goods sold at auction); Paton & Sons v. Payne & Co. (1897), 35 Sc. L. R. 112, H. L. (delivery of printing machine; time not essential); Sanders v. Maclean (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 327, 336, C. A. (punctual delivery of bill of lading not ordinarily a condition). The reason for the general rule is obvious. A mercantile contract is not always an isolated transaction, but a link in a chain of transactions, and if A. does not keep his contract with B., then B. may not be able to keep his contract with C., so that punctual performance may go to the whole consideration for the sale. In many cases the time of shipment or delivery of the goods is treated as part of the essential description of the goods themselves (Bowes v. Shand (1877), 2 App. Cas. 455 (see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 413, note (c)); Re General Trading Co. and Van Stolk's Commissiehandel (1911), 16 Com. Cas. 95 ("shipment to be made and bill of lading dated during December or January")); compare Gattorno v. Adams (1862), 12 C. B. (N.S.) 560; see, too, Graves v. Legg (1854), 9 Exch. 709; Busk v. Adams, supra (specific cargo shipped as per bill of lading dated September or October); Alexander v. Vanderzee (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 530, Ex. Ch. (for shipment in June and July); *Brandt v. 282. In a contract of sale, unless the circumstances of the contract are such as to show a different intention, there is—

(1) an implied condition on the part of the seller that, in the case of a sale, he has a right to sell (k) the goods, and that, in the case of an agreement to sell (l), he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass (m); other particulars to be declared within sixty days of date of bill of lading; Ashmore & Son v. Cox (C. S.) & Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 436 (to be shipped by sailer or sailers from the Philippines between 1st May and 31st July); Thalmann Frères & Co. v. Texas Flour Mills (1900), 5 Com. Cas. 321, C. A. (clearance not later than 31st May); Nickoll and Knight v. Ashton, Edridge & Co., [1901] 2 K. B. 126, C. A. (to be shipped from Egypt during February per ship O.); compare Kidston & Co. v. Monceau Ironworks Co. (1902), 7 Com. Cas. 82 (delivery of specification at particular time not a condition). Like other conditions, conditions as to time may be waived (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1) (a); see p. 150, ante; Alexander v. Gardner (1835), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 671); see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 413.

(j) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 10 (2). This is the rule in mercantile contracts generally (Webb v. Fairmaner (1838), 3 M. & W. 473). But by usage “month” may have a special trade meaning in a particular trade (Bissell v. Beard (1873), 28 L. T. 740); see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., p. 265; and see, generally, title TIME.

(k) All that “right to sell” means is that the seller can pass the property, and that nobody has a title superior to that of the seller so as to interfere with the use (Monforts v. Marsden (1895), 12 R. P. C. 266, 269).

(l) As to the distinction between “sale” and “agreement to sell,” see p. 117, ante.

(m) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 12 (1); Allen v. Hopkins (1844), 13 M. & W. 94, 102; Eichholz v. Bannister (1864), 17 C. B. (N. S.) 708 (job lot of goods sold in a shop); Raphael v. Burt (1884), Cab. & El. 325; Edwards v. Pearson (1890), 6 T. L. R. 220, C. A. In cases of covenants of title to land the breach takes place when the property was intended to pass without the buyer being evicted (Kingdon v. Nottle (1815), 4 M. & S. 53; Turner v. Moon, [1901] 2 Ch. 825; Baynes & Co. v. Lloyd & Sons, [1895] 1 Q. B. 820, 824). The old common law rule was that on the sale of a specific chattel there was no implied undertaking as to title (Noy’s Maxims, ch. 42; Paget v. Wilkinson (1696), cited in note to Williamson v. Allison (1802), 2 East, 446, 448; Ormrod v. Huth (1845), 14 M. & W. 651, 664, Ex. Ch.); but, as Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., said in 1851, “the exceptions have well nigh eaten up the rule” (Sims v. Marryat (1851), 17 Q. B. 281, at p. 291); and now the Act lays down a clear primâ facie rule. In the following cases before the Act (some of which may still be of authority, as showing “a different intention”) there was held to be no implied warranty of title:—Peto v. Blades (1814), 5 Taunt. 657 (qualified warranty by sheriff); Morley v. Attenborough (1849), 3 Exch. 500 (sale of unredeemed pledges); Chapman v. Speller (1850), 14 Q. B. 621 (purchase of another man’s bargain at sale by sheriff); Smith v. Neale (1857), 2 C. B. (N. S.) 67 (assignment of patent: no warranty that invention new); Bagueley v. Hawley (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 625 (purchase of bargain at auction for second-hand boiler); Re Rogers, Ex parte Villars (1874), 9 Ch. App. 432, 437 (no implied warranty of title by sheriff); Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeez (1878), L. R. 5 Ind. App. 116 (qualified warranty by sheriff); see also, since the Act, Payne v. Elsden (1900), 17 T. L. R. 161 (sale by auctioneer of goods under invalid distress). As to the master of a ship, see the dictum in Page v. Cowasjee Eduljee (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 127, 144 (sale of ship by master as such implies no warranty).

283. Where there is a contract for the sale of goods by description there is an implied condition that the goods shall correspond with the description (p); and if the sale be by sample as well as by

(n) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 12 (2); and see "warranty," defined, p. 122, ante. The distinction between the condition as to title and the warranty of quiet possession is similar to that between a covenant for title and one for quiet enjoyment. The former is an assurance by the grantor that he has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey; the latter is an assurance to the grantee against the consequences of a defective title and of any disturbance thereupon (Howell v. Richards (1809), 11 East, 633, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 642). Thus, if the title is defective, the buyer may, under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 12 (1), reject the goods, but if he has accepted them and is afterwards disturbed he has, under ibid., s. 12 (2), his remedy by action for breach of the warranty of quiet possession, the right of action arising on disturbance. Following the analogy of realty, the words "have and enjoy" would seem to cover the obtaining of possession (Ludwell v. Newman (1795), 6 Term Rep. 458; see also Hawkes v. Orton (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 367). But in this sense the clause is unnecessary, having regard to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 27, 28; see pp. 204, 205, post. The implied warranty will probably be construed similarly to express contracts of indemnity or for quiet enjoyment, that is to say, as applicable to all acts of the seller, but only to lawful acts of third persons; see Foster and Wilson v. Mapes (1591), Cro. Eliz. 212; Chantflower v. Priestly (1603), Cro. Eliz. 914 (quiet possession of goods); 2 Wms. Saund., ed. 1871, p. 526; Nash v. Palmer (1816), 5 M. & S. 374. The effect of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 12 (2), has been stated to this effect in Monforts v. Marsden (1895), 12 R. P. C. 266.

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 12 (3). That an express stipulation to the same effect would not be a condition at common law is shown by the reasoning of BRETT, M.R., in Sanders v. Maclean (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 327, C. A., at p. 337.

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13. The general principle is clear: Si aes pro auro veneat, non valet (Kennedy v. Panama etc. Mail Co. (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 580, 588; Wieler v. Schilizzi (1856), 17 C. B. 619, per WILLES, J. ("Calcutta linseed")). "If you contract to sell peas, you cannot oblige a party to take beans. If the description of the article tendered is different in any respect, it is not the article bargained for, and the other party is not bound to take it" (Boves v. Shand (1877), 2 App. Cas. 455, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 480). The expression "description" usually means a particular class or kind of goods; but it also includes any statement which may be essential to the identity of the goods as contracted for, as, e.g., as to their quality or fitness, place of origin or of shipment, time of despatch or delivery, mode of packing etc. The question is whether the untruth of the statement makes the goods delivered or tendered different things from what were contracted for (Gompertz v. Bartlett (1853), 2 E. & B. 849 (inland bill sold as foreign); Jones v. Clarke (1858), 2 H. & N. 725 (pitch pine to arrive from Savannah); Boves v. Shand, supra (shipment in particular month); Makin v. London Rice Mill Co. (1869), 20 L. T. 705 (rice "in double bags")). It depends upon the construction of the contract whether any statement is a description, or a collateral warranty only, or a mere representation (Allan v. Lake (1852), 18 Q. B. 560, per ERLE, J., at p. 566). description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description (q).

Goods are sold by description where the buyer enters into the contract of sale in reliance on the description of the goods given by or on behalf of the seller (r). There may be a sale by description although the goods are specific (s).

Nicholson & Sons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K. B. 725 ("B.O.V."). And a particular description may attach to the goods by estoppel. Thus, on a sale of "oats," the seller may be aware that the buyer thinks he is being promised old oats (Smith v. Hughes (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 597). Examination of bulk or sample does not necessarily negative a sale by description (Josling v. Kingsford (1863), 13 C. B. (N. S.) 447 (latent defect); Tye v. Fynmore (1813), 3 Camp. 462). But an examination, where, at least, the nature of the goods is discoverable, may show that the buyer bought on his own judgment, and not by description (Prosser v. Hooper (1817), 1 Moore (c. r.), 106 (article called saffron bought at damage price, and examined by buyer); Parsons v. Sexton (1847), 4 C. B. 899; Attwater v. Kinnes (1906), in House of Lords, unreported (Arctic mica)). Nor is a sale by description negated by a clause excluding the liability of the seller, or the buyer's right of rejection, or providing for arbitration (Azémar v. Casella (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 677, Ex. Ch.; Gorton v. Macintosh Co., [1883] W. N. 103, C. A.; Vigers Brothers v. Sanderson Brothers, [1901] 1 K. B. 608; Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394). But, where several statements are made about the goods, a clause excluding liability for errors of description may turn one or more of such statements into mere representations (Taylor v. Bullen (1850), 5 Exch. 779 (barque described as "teak built, A1, and fitted for passenger ship"); Reynolds v. Wrench (1888), 23 L. J. N. C. 27 (seed sold as "Yellow Tankard turnip"); Howcroft and Watkins v. Perkins (1900), 16 T. L. R. 217 (celery seed also described as "Clayworth prize"). It is submitted that these cases are not inconsistent with Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, supra. Parol evidence may be given of the trade meaning of the description contained in the contract (Powell v. Horton (1836), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 668 ("mess pork of Scott & Co."); Woodhouse v. Swift (1836), 7 C. & P. 310 ("sound timber"); Ryder v. Woodley (1862), 10 W. R. 294 ("St. Gilles Marais wheat": mixture of barley); Lucas v. Bristow (1858), E. B. & E. 907 ("best oil"); see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 264 et seq. But, on ordinary principles, parol evidence is not admissible to vary or to negative the description contained in the written contract (Smith v. Jeffryes (1846), 15 M. & W. 561; Harnor v. Groves (1855), 15 C. B. 667; Schweir v. Thorns (1862), 3 F. & F. 243; Gardiner v. Gray (1815), 4 Camp. 144); and see title EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., pp. 427, 566.

(g) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13; Nichol v. Godts (1854), 10 Exch. 191; Azémar v. Casella, supra; Lovegrove v. Fisher (1860), 2 F. & F. 128 (turnip seed delivered for rape seed); Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, supra (giant sainfoin seed delivered as common English); see also Towerson v. Aspatria Agricultural Co-operative Society (1877), 27 L. T. 276, Ex. Ch. (guaranteed analysis of bulk to accompany sample). The case contemplated is a sale by sample as well as by description. Sometimes, however, the sample is the only description, as where the subject-matter of the sale is a thing of which the character is unknown; here accordance of the bulk with the sample satisfies the contract (Mody v. Gregson (1868), L. R. 4 Exch. 49, 53 Ex. Ch.; Carter v. Crick (1859), 4 H. & N. 412 (seed)).

(r) Varley v. Whipp, [1900] 1 Q. B. 513. Unascertained or future goods can only be identified by what is said with regard to them. The buyer, therefore, necessarily relies upon what is said. But he may rely upon the physical identity of specific goods; so that what is said about them may be therefore only an immaterial representation, or at most a collateral warranty.

General rule.

(i.) Caveat Emptor.

284. Subject to the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (t), and any other statutory provisions, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract of sale, except as hereinafter stated (a).

(ii.) Fitness for Particular Purpose.

285. Where the buyer, expressly or by implication (b), makes known to the seller the particular (c) purpose for which the goods are required, so as to show (d) that the buyer relies on the seller's goods, when a condition.

(t) 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71. The general exceptions to the rule are contained in ibid., ss. 14, 15; see note (a), infra; p. 160, post. These general exceptions are supplemented by certain statutory provisions as to particular classes of goods; see, e.g., Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 17; see, further, p. 282, post. As to usages to the same effect, see the cases cited in title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 265, 266; and compare titles FOOD AND DRUGS, Vol. XV., pp. 5 et seq., 45 et seq.; MEDICINE AND PHARMACY, Vol. XX., pp. 377 et seq., 381 et seq.

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14. "Contract of sale" includes both an agreement to sell and a sale (ibid., s. 62 (1)); and "quality of goods" includes their state or condition (ibid.). The general rule as to quality or fitness is caveat emptor, but it has become in reality largely the exception. The same rule applies to goods given in exchange (La Neuville v. Nourse (1813), 3 Camp. 351). Illustrations of sales are Chandelor v. Lopus (1603), Cro. Jac. 4; 2 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., pp. 54, 62, Ex. Ch.; Barr v. Gibson (1838), 3 M. & W. 390, 399 (ship sold at sea); Chanter v. Hopkins (1838), 4 M. & W. 399 (smoke-consuming furnace); Burnby v. Bollett (1847), 16 M. & W. 644 (carcase of meat: seller not dealer); Emmerton v. Mathews (1862), 7 H. & N. 586 (carcase of meat: seller a dealer); Hall v. Conder (1857), 2 C. B. (N. S.) 22, 40 (patent); Horsfall v. Thomas (1862), 1 H. & C. 90 (defective gun); Kennedy v. Panama etc. Mail Co. (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 580, 587 (horse (cited as an example only)); Jones v. Just (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 197, 202 (rule stated). In Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 I. R. 585, at p. 615, C. A. (unwholesome crab), FITZGIBBON, L.J. says: "Caveat emptor does not mean in law or Latin that the buyer must take chance, it means that he must take care. It applies to the purchase of specific things, e.g., to a horse or a picture upon which the buyer can and usually does exercise his own judgment. It applies also whenever the buyer voluntarily chooses what he buys. It applies also whenever by usage or otherwise it is a term of the contract express or implied that the buyer shall not rely on the skill or judgment of the seller."

(b) Knowledge may be imparted by matters ab extra the contract itself, even when it is in writing, or by the very description of the goods themselves (Gillespie Brothers & Co. v. Cheney, Eggar & Co., [1896] 2 Q. B. 59, 63; Jacobs v. Scott & Co. (1899), 2 Fraser, 70 House of Lords; Preist v. Last, [1903] 2 K. B. 148, C. A.).

(c) "Particular purpose" means purpose known or communicated, not special, as distinguished from general purpose (Preist v. Last, supra; Wallis v. Russell, supra).

(d) These words mean "in circumstances showing." Not only must the buyer's purpose be communicated, but he must rely upon the seller's skill or judgment. Thus, if, e.g., the goods are to be manufactured according to the buyer's plan, the buyer relies upon his own judgment (Hall v. Burke (1886), 3 T. L. R. 165, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R.). And generally no condition or warranty of fitness is implied where the buyer, although he may state his purpose, selects the goods he requires (Wilson v. Dunville (1879), 4 L. R. Ir. 249; see also Turner v. Mucklow (1862), skill or judgment (e), and the goods are of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply (f), whether he be the manufacturer or not, there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose (g).

(e) The fact that no ordinary skill or judgment could detect a defect does not negative the implied condition if the seller's skill etc. is in fact relied upon (Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 608, 613, C. A.).

(f) The seller must therefore be a dealer (Wilson v. Dunville (1879), 4 L. R. Ir. 249; Turner v. Mucklow (1862), 3 Jur. (N. s.) 870).

The burden of proof of fitness is prima facie on the seller (Hayden v. Hayward (1808), 1 Camp. 180). The parties may agree that a fixed period of trial, without the discovery of any unfitness of the goods, shall be conclusive (Sharp v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1841), 9 M. & W. 7). The provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (1), and of ibid., s. 14 (2) (see p. 159, post), are not mutually exclusive. Thus, the fact that the latter clause is satisfied does not show that the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (1), is (Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1910] 2 K. B. 831, C. A., per KENNEDY, L.J., at p. 843). An implied condition of fitness covers latent defects (Randall v. Newson, supra; Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., supra); and the fact that the buyer has an opportunity of examining, or actually

But in the case of a contract for the sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name there is no implied condition as to its fitness for any particular purpose (h). It must, however, be a merchantable article, and of the description contracted for (i).

and War-

(iii.) Merchantable Quality.

286. Where goods are bought by description (j) from a seller who deals in goods of that description, whether he be the manufacturer or not, there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality (k); provided that if the buyer examines, the goods is immaterial if the other's judgment is relied on, which is a question of fact (Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 I. R. 585, C. A., per PALLES, C.B., and the Court of Appeal). Where, however, the defect in the goods is one known to the buyer, or, where he has seen the goods, is obvious to the senses, it is conceived that the presumption will be that the buyer bought on his own judgment, so far as the particular defect is concerned, according to the analogy of the rule applicable to express warranties; see p. 164, post; but see the dictum of the Court of Appeal in Randall v. Newson (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 102, C. A. It was formerly thought that there is necessarily an implied condition that provisions sold are fit for food (3 Bl. Com. 165; but see to the contrary, Burnby v. Bollett (1847), 16 M. & W. 644, where the law is considered; Emmerton v. Mathews (1862), 7 H. & N. 586; Smith v. Baker, Son, and Death (1878), 40 L. T. 261; and, since the Act, Newbury v. Perowne (1908), referred to in 72 J. P. (Journal) 302). The Act draws no distinction between provisions and other goods (Wallis v. Russell, supra, at p. 611; Wren v. Holt, [1903] 1 K. B. 610, C. A.; Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 608, C. A.; Chaproniere v. Mason (1905), 21 T. L. R. 633, C. A.; Jackson v. Watson & Sons, [1909] 2 K. B. 193, C. A.), provided the seller be a dealer; see Burnby v. Bollett, supra (seller not dealer).

(h) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (1) (proviso). In such a case the buyer is deemed to buy on his own judgment, even although the goods are not specific (Chanter v. Hopkins (1838), 4 M. & W. 399 (patent smoke-consuming furnace); Prideaux v. Bunnett (1857), 1 C. B. (n. s.) 613; Prideaux v. M'Murray (1860) 2 F. & F. 225 (smoke-consuming valve); Ollivant v. Bayley (1843), 5 Q. B. 288 (patent printing machine); Chalmers v. Harding (1868), 17 L. T. 571 (corn reaper); Paul & Co. v. Glasgow Corporation (1900), 3 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 119 (patent smoke-consuming apparatus)); compare title FOOD AND DRUGS, Vol. XV., p. 22. As to what constitutes a "patent or other trade name" for this purpose, see Gillespie Brothers & Co. v. Cheney, Eggar & Co., [1896] 2 Q. B. 59, 64; Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1910] 2 K. B. 831, 839, 842, C. A. The proviso is a branch of the larger rule that a buyer buys on his own judgment where he defines the thing he requires for his stated purpose. It also assumes that the seller has not expressly undertaken that the goods shall be fit for the buyer's purpose, in which case the buyer would of course not be bound to take the goods (Chanter v. Hopkins, supra, per Lord ABINGER, C.B., at p. 405; Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. Spencer & Sons (1886), 2 T. L. R. 554, C. A.; Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., supra).

(i) Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 13, 14 (2); Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., supra; Williamson v. Rover Cycle Co., [1901] 2 I. R. 615, C. A., per FITZGIBBON, L.J.

(j) For the meaning of these words, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13; p. 156, ante. The description may be implied (Wren v. Holt, supra).

has examined the goods there is no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed (l).

Goods are of merchantable quality where they are of such quality and in such condition that a reasonable man, acting reasonably, would, after a full examination, accept the goods in the circumstances of the case in performance of his offer to buy them, whether he buys for his own use or to sell again (m).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Sale by Sample.

intention.

287. A contract of sale is a contract for sale by sample where there is a term in the contract, express or implied, to that effect (n).

s. 14 (2), see Gardiner v. Gray (1815), 4 Camp. 144 (waste silk); Laing v. Fidgeon (1815), 6 Taunt. 108 (saddles); Jones v. Bright (1829), 5 Bing. 533 (copper sheathing); Mody v. Gregson (1868), L. R. 4 Exch. 49, Ex. Ch. (shirting); Jones v. Just (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 197 (Manilla hemp), reviewing the previous cases; Beer v. Walker (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 677 (rabbits); McClelland v. Stewart (1883), 12 L. R. Ir. 125 (goods "as classified": exclusion of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (2)); Drummond v. Van Ingen (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284, 290; Jones v. Padgett (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 650 (cloth); Wren v. Holt, [1903] 1 K. B. 610, C. A. (beer contaminated with arsenic); Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., [1910] 2 K. B. 831, C. A. (motor omnibuses); Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A. (motor horns). The condition does not apply to the receptacle of the goods where it is a mere adjunct to, or incident of, the goods themselves, as, e.g., the casks containing oil sold, but the state of the receptacle may affect the quality of the goods themselves (Gower v. Von Dedalzen (1837), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 717; Makin v. London Rice Mill Co. (1869), 20 L. T. 705). As under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (1), it is necessary under ibid., s. 14 (2), that the seller should be a dealer in the class of goods sold; otherwise there is no condition (Ipswich Gaslight Co. v. King & Co. (1886), 3 T. L. R. 100, C. A. (surplus tar: seller not a dealer)). The rule applies to specific as well as to unascertained goods (Shepherd v. Pybus (1842), 3 Man. & G. 868; Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., supra, at p. 838). As to deterioration of the goods in transit to the buyer, see p. 223, post; Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 33.

(l) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (2); compare, as to sale by sample, ibid., s. 15 (2) (c); see p. 162, post; Drummond v. Van Ingen (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284, 290; Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 I. R. 585, 596, C. A. The rule previously to the Act was that a warranty of merchantable quality was implied where goods of a specified description, i.e., kind, inaccessible to the buyer's examination, were contracted for. In such a case the presumption was that the buyer relied upon the judgment, knowledge, and information of the seller, and the maxim caveat emptor accordingly did not apply (Jones v. Just (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 197). Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), the condition is not excluded except where the buyer has actually examined the goods, and then only as regards discoverable defects. The Act has thus adapted to implied conditions the principle of the rule at common law that an express general warranty does not cover patent defects; see p. 164, post.

(m) Bristol Tramways etc. Carriage Co., Ltd. v. Fiat Motors, Ltd., supra, per FARWELL, L. J., at p. 841; see also Jones v. Bright (1829), 5 Bing. 533, per BEST, C. J., at p. 544; Shepherd v. Pybus, supra (barge unfit for ordinary use as such); and, if the buyer carries on two businesses, of which the seller knows one only, the question is whether the goods are merchantable as supplied to a buyer carrying on the business known to the seller (Jones v. Padgett (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 650).

(n) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (1). As to annexing such a term by usage to a written contract, see Syers v. Jonas (1848),

The mere exhibition of a sample during the negotiation of the contract does not constitute the contract one for sale by sample (o).

SECT. 7.
Conditions
and Warranties.

288. In the case of a contract for sale by sample the following conditions are implied :—

Conditions
implied.

- (1) that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality (p);
- (2) that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample (q);

2 Exch. 111. As to express sales by sample, see, e.g., Russell v. Nicolopulo (1860), 8 C. B. (N. S.) 362 (bulk to be equal to agent's report and to samples); Towerson v. Aspatia Agricultural Co-operative Society (1872), 27 L. T. 276, Ex. Ch.; Clark v. Schwartz (1853), 2 W. R. 16 (bulk to be equal to sample and analysis); Heyworth v. Hutchinson (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 447 ("wool guaranteed about similar to samples"); Azémar v. Casella (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 677, Ex. Ch. ("cotton guaranteed equal to sample": otherwise an allowance); Re Walkers, Winser and Hamm and Shaw, Son & Co., [1904] 2 K. B. 152 ("about as per sample"). The office of a sample, like inspection of bulk, is to present to the eye the intention of the parties, which it may be difficult or impossible to express in words. But a sample cannot be treated as conveying any greater information than would be given by express words (Drummond v. Van Ingen (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284, 297 (latent defect in goods and sample). Parkinson v. Lee (1802), 2 East, 314, to the contrary, is no longer law (Randall v. Newson (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 102, C. A.).

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (2) (a). "Quality" includes state or condition; see p. 121, ante. Where the goods do not answer to their description, ibid., s. 13, also applies; see p. 154, ante. See, on this enactment, *Hibbert v. As to "average sample," see Leonard v. Fowler (1871), 44 New York Reports, 289. As to mistake in exhibiting the wrong sample, and the effect, see Scott v. Littledale (1858), 8 E. & B. 815; Megaw v. Molloy (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 530, C. A. As to part of bulk being inferior to sample, see Aitken, Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Boullen and Gatenby, [1908] S. C. 490. The implied condition applies to specific goods; accordingly Heyworth v. Hutchinson (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 447, is open to reconsideration.

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (2) (b); Lorymer v. Smith (1822), 1 B. & C. 1; Heilbutt v. Hickson (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 438). The condition is excluded under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55, where there is a stipulation for payment of the price on arrival of the goods, and before actual delivery to the buyer (Polenghi Brothers v. Dried Milk Co., Ltd. (1904), 10 Com. Cas. 42 (cash on arrival against shipping documents)). But the buyer retains the right, after payment, to examine the goods on delivery or tender by the seller, as a condition precedent to acceptance (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 34); see p. 228, post.

Conditions
and Warranties.

(3) that the goods shall be free from any defect rendering them unmerchable, which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample (r).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Other Common Law or Statutory Conditions and Warranties.

By trade usage.

289. An implied condition as to quality or fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade (s).

Sale by manufacturer
as such.

290. Where there is a contract of sale by a manufacturer, as such, and not as a dealer, there is perhaps, in the absence of trade usage, an implied condition that the goods are of the seller's own manufacture (t).

Statutory
warranties.

291. Statutory warranties are annexed to the sale of certain articles. For example, on the sale of an anchor or chain cable, there is an implied warranty that it has been proved and tested before sale (a); on the sale of hops in any bag or pocket marked with any description etc. indicating the name of the grower, or the place or year of growth, the seller is deemed to contract for the genuineness of the description etc. (b); and on the sale of an article with a trade mark, there is an implied warranty that the mark is genuine and has been properly applied (c).

(r) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (2) (c); Macfarlane v. Taylor (1868), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 245; Heilbutt v. Hickson (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 438; Mody v. Gregson (1868), L. R. 4 Exch. 49, Ex. Ch.; Drummond v. Van Ingen (1887), 12 App. Cas. 284; Haines, Batchelor & Co. v. Firminiger (1885), 2 T. L. R. 107. For the meaning of "merchable," see p. 160, ante. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 15 (2) (c), presupposes that both the sample and the bulk contain a latent defect. If the latent defect is in the sample only there is no breach of the provision, and the question would seem to be whether, under ibid., s. 15 (2) (a), the bulk corresponds with the apparent quality of the sample. If the defect in the sample is patent, the seller fulfils his contract by delivering the bulk in accordance with the defective sample, for any implied intention that the bulk shall be of higher quality is negated (Mody v. Gregson, supra).

(s) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (3); Jones v. Bowden (1813), 4 Taunt. 847; Weall v. King (1810), 12 East, 452, cited by HEATH, J., in Jones v. Bowden, supra (sale of sheep as "stock"); compare Syers v. Jonas (1848), 2 Exch. 111 (sale by sample implied). Conversely, an implied condition or warranty may be negated by the usage of a particular trade (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55). As to trade usage generally, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 249 et seq.

(t) Johnson v. Raylton (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 438, C. A., BRAMWELL, L.J., dissenting; contra in Scotland (West Stockton Iron Co. v. Neilson and Maxwell (1880), 7 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1055; Johnson and Reay v. Nicholl & Son (1881), 8 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 437). If this implied condition can be considered as coming within the expression "quality of goods," it is negated by the exclusive terms of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14, but if it does not fall within that term, Johnson v. Raylton, supra, is still law in England. Quære, however, whether manufacture by the seller himself may not in some circumstances be considered an implied description of the goods under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13.

293. An implied condition or warranty in a contract of sale may be negated or varied by express agreement, or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by usage, if the usage be such as to bind both parties to the contract (e). But an express warranty or condition does not negative a warranty or condition implied by the Act unless inconsistent therewith (f).

B. 94, C. A.).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Construction of Certain Express Warranties or Conditions.

294. A limitation of time added to an express stipulation as to the quality, fitness, or other incident of the goods primâ facie means that the goods shall conform to the warranty or condition during the whole of the time (g); but it may, by the construction of the contract, the nature of the goods sold, or usage of trade, be intended to mean that the seller shall be liable for such breach only of the warranty or condition as shall be enforced by action, or notified (h) to the seller, within the time (i).

295. Where goods are to be supplied to the buyer to the satisfaction of a third person (k), and the goods are also subject to an express warranty or condition, the approval of the third person is not, unless it is otherwise agreed, deemed to show conclusively that the warranty or condition has been duly performed (l). Conversely, the fact that the goods conform to the warranty or condition does not show that they are supplied to the satisfaction of the third person (m).

296. An express (n) warranty of goods, although in general terms, is not, unless it be otherwise agreed (o), deemed to protect the buyer against defects in the goods of which he was, at the time of the contract, aware, or which, the buyer having at that time seen the goods, were apparent without the exercise of skill or knowledge (p).

(h) A notification is, however, not ordinarily a condition precedent to a right of action; see p. 276, post.

(i) Chapman v. Gwyther, supra. In Bywater v. Richardson (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 508, and Smart v. Hyde (1841), 8 M. & W. 723, the seller's responsibility was in terms limited to a certain time; see also Speak v. Taylor (1894), 10 T. L. R. 224 (damages held to cover past and future defects).

(k) As to contracts subject to approval of the buyer or a third person, see, generally, titles BUILDING CONTRACTS, ENGINEERS, AND ARCHITECTS, Vol. III. pp. 206—8; CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 433; and note (g), p. 115, ante; and see also Shipway v. Broadwood, [1899] 1 Q. B. 369, C. A. (seller's collusion with third person); Batterbury v. Vyse (1863), 2 H. & C. 42 (buyer's collusion with third person).

(m) Grafton v. Eastern Counties Rail. Co. (1853), 8 Exch. 699.

(n) COCKBURN, C.J., in Burges v. Wickham (1863), 3 B. & S. 669, 684, considered that the principle a fortiori applied to warranties or conditions implied by law; and it has been expressly adopted by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (2); see p. 159, ante. It is also impliedly enacted in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 13, 14 (1), 15.

(o) The seller may, for example, warrant the future soundness of goods having a patent defect (Liddard v. Kain (1824), 2 Bing. 183).

(p) "If one sell me a horse apparent blind, and warrant him sound of all his members, and I see him, I shall have no deceit, for that I might see it. Otherwise it is of a disease within his body; there upon the warrant I shall have deceit. But if one sell a blind horse, and warrant him to one that does not see him, deceit lyes" (Kitchin on Courts, 1675 ed., p. 347); Bailey v. Merrell (1615), 3 Bulst. 94 (horse with one eye); Butterfeild v. Burroughs

But the buyer is entitled to rely upon such a warranty, and is not bound to examine the goods (q).

Where the seller, in order to prevent, or render ineffectual, an examination of the goods by the buyer, gives an express warranty, or uses some other artifice, an express general warranty is deemed to cover defects which would otherwise have been apparent (r).

SECT. 8.—Stamps.

297. As a general rule, contracts of sale reduced into writing do not require any stamp, for any agreement, letter, or memorandum made for or relating to the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise is exempt from duty by statute (s). Stamps.

(1706), 1 Salk. 211 (same: defect not obvious); Liddard v. Kain (1824), 2 Bing. 183; Margetson v. Wright (1831), 7 Bing. 603; (1832) 8 Bing. 454; Holliday v. Morgan (1858), 1 E. & E. 1; Smith v. O'Bryan (1864), 13 W. R. 79 (defect not patent); Cowdy v. Thomas (1876), 36 L. T. 22 (inspection for collateral purpose of buyer's agent). The rule is as old as the Civil law (Dig. 18, 1, 43, 1), and is also the same in equity (Dyer v. Hargrave, Hargrave v. Dyer (1805), 10 Ves. 505; Jennings v. Broughton (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 126, 131, C. A.), and illustrates the wider principle that a thing may be sold subject to defects (Ducondu v. Dupuy (1883), 9 App. Cas. 150, P. C. (title)). In written contracts oral evidence is not admissible to show that a defect was pointed out by the seller (Smith v. O'Bryan, supra, per BRAMWELL, B.); contra in America (Schuyler v. Russ (1804), 2 Caines, 202). See also, generally, title ANIMALS, Vol. I., p. 389. For forms of warranty as to condition on sale of horses, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 578, 579. R. 55 (ship under charterparty). The buyer cannot, however, wilfully blind his eyes (Vandewalker v. Osmer (1873), 65 Barbour (New York), 556).

(r) Dorrington v. Edwards (1620), 2 Roll. Rep. 188; Kenner v. Harding (1877), 28 American Reports, 615. The law is well stated in Chadsey v. Greene (1856), 24 Connecticut Reports, 562.

(s) Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 22, Sched. I., title "Agreement"; see Skrine v. Elmore (1809), 2 Camp. 407 (warranty in receipt for price); Meering v. Duke (1828), 2 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 121 (sale of ship); Chanter v. Dickinson (1843), 6 Scott (N. R.), 182 (affixing chattel and sale of patent rights); Mayfield v. Robinson (1845), 7 Q. B. 486 (memorandum of sale with subsidiary stipulations); Sadler v. Johnson (1847), 16 M. & W. 775 (agreement to guarantee payment for goods by consignee); and other cases in title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., p. 473; Topping v. Bull (1861), 2 F. & F. 408 (agreement to employ auctioneer); and other cases in title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 538 et seq. The general principle is that an agreement, of which the primary object is a sale, is exempt, other stipulations being merely subsidiary (Rein v. Lane (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 144, per BLACKBURN, J.). As to contracts now falling under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (2) (see p. 128, ante), no memorandum or other writing made necessary by the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), is deemed to be an agreement within the meaning of any statute relating to the duties of stamps (ibid., s. 8); see Jones v. Ryder (1838), 4 M. & W. 32. An agreement for the sale of any interest in goods, wares, or merchandise, or any ship or vessel, is expressly exempted from the conveyances duty imposed upon certain contracts or agreements for sale (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59 (1); Revenue Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 43), s. 7); see also title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 538 et seq. As to exemptions from stamp duties generally, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 721 et seq.

Stamps.

If, however, a contract of sale be under seal (t), or is in such a form as to come specifically under some other heading charged with duty, it must be stamped accordingly (u), and every instrument whereby any property, upon the sale thereof, is transferred to, or vested in, a purchaser, or any other person on his behalf, or by his direction, is subject to the stamp applicable to a conveyance on sale (x). Moreover, certain mercantile documents used in connection with contracts of sale are subject to specific rates of duty (y).

Drakeford* (1811), 3 Taunt. 382 (lease containing contract of sale); and see, generally, title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 708 et seq. By the Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 13), s. 7, hire-purchase agreements are made subject to an agreement, or to a deed, stamp, as the case may be; as to hire-purchase agreements generally, see titles BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 554 et seq.; BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., pp. 12, 13.

(x) Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 54. Thus, absolute bills of sale are subject to ad valorem duty as conveyances; see the scale in title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., p. 76, note (k). These duties are, by the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7, c. 8), s. 73, doubled, except in cases where the consideration does not exceed £500, and the instrument contains a statement that the sale does not form part of a larger transaction, or series of transactions, the consideration for which exceeds £500. A bill of sale cannot be registered unless the original be duly stamped (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 41; see title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., p. 76); but, if the deed has actually been registered, the omission of the stamp does not render the deed void (Bellamy v. Saull (1863), 4 B. & S. 265). As to the words "transferred to or vested in," see Phillips v. Morrison (1844), 12 M. & W. 740 (coal to be severed by buyer). By the Finance Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 16), s. 12, the ad valorem duty on a conveyance on sale is payable on property, including goods and chattels, purchased by a person "authorised to purchase property" under any Act (Eastbourne Corporation v. A.-G., [1904] A. C. 155).

(y) A "warrant for goods," as defined in that Act, must be stamped with a 3d. stamp, which may be adhesive (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 111, Sched. I.). Receipts by inland carriers, and weight notes issued with stamped warrants, are exempt (ibid.). Delivery orders are exempt from stamp duty (Finance Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 4), s. 5 (2)). A promissory note or bill of exchange given or accepted for the price must be stamped as such; but an instrument relating to the sale of goods is not a promissory note merely because it contains an express promise to pay the price (Ellis v. Ellis (1820), Gow, 216); see the general principle stated in Mortgage Insurance Corporation v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 352, C. A., and in title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 537; and see title BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES, AND NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, Vol. II., pp. 573, 574. As to a bill of lading, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION; and as to stamp duties generally, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 700 et seq.

when, and the conditions subject to which, the property in the goods is to be transferred (z).

A contract of sale must, like all contracts, be construed as a whole. Accordingly, the property in the goods passes where the terms of the contract show a clear intention that it shall pass (a), notwithstanding that there may be an express provision in the contract to the contrary (b).

SECT. 1.
Transfer of the Property from Seller to Buyer.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Unascertained Goods.

299. Where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained goods, no property (c) in the goods is transferred to the buyer unless and until the goods are ascertained (d).

Ascertainment of goods
necessary.

In particular, where the individuality of the goods depends upon their being separated, weighed, measured, tested, or counted, or upon some other act or thing being done in relation thereto for their ascertainment, the goods are not ascertained until such act or thing be done (e).

Goods are unascertained, notwithstanding that they are to be taken from a specific larger bulk, if the identity of the portion so to be taken is unascertained (f).

The ascertainment of the goods does not of itself necessarily pass the property. It is necessary that the parties should agree that the property in the goods, when ascertained, should pass (g).

goods, and on the happening whereof it is agreed that the property shall pass (i);

(2) by the unconditional appropriation, subsequently to the contract, as the subject-matter thereof, of the goods with the assent of both parties (j).

301. Unless a different intention appears (k), where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained or future goods (l) by description (m), and goods of that description (n) and in a deliverable state (o) are unconditionally (p) appropriated to the contract, either by the seller with the assent of the buyer, or by the buyer with the assent of the seller, the property (q) in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer. Such assent may be express or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made (r). But (CH.) 265 (materials brought on land and certified). So it may be agreed, e.g., that all fruit that falls from a particular tree should thereupon become the property of the buyer.

(j) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 5 (1); Rohde v. Thwaites (1827), 6 B. & C. 388, per HOLROYD, J., at p. 393. PARKE, B., in Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1, at p. 8, points out that the word "appropriation" is used in the cases in two senses. It may mean a selection with common consent of the goods as the goods to be delivered, no property nevertheless passing, thus constituting an obligatio certi corporis; or a final appropriation of the goods to the contract, so as to pass the property therein to the buyer. In the text, supra, and in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 18, r. 5, and ibid., s. 19, the term is used in the second sense.

(m) Which implies a condition that the goods shall conform to the description (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13); see p. 154, ante.

(n) Vigers Brothers v. Sanderson Brothers, [1901] 1 K. B. 608; Bowes v. Shand (1877), 2 App. Cas. 455 (shipment in certain months). The property does not pass, if the goods do not conform to their description, even although there is an express agreement that the property shall pass on shipment (Vigers Brothers v. Sanderson Brothers, supra).

(o) I.e., "such a state that the buyer would under the contract be bound to take delivery" (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (4)).

(p) For the seller may reserve the right of disposal under ibid., s. 19 (see p. 181, post); or there may be other conditions precedent to the passing of the property. There seems to be no reason to confine the word "unconditionally" to the absence of express conditions; e.g., suppose the goods, after being identified, have to be weighed to ascertain the price. Here, it is conceived, the analogy of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 3, would apply; see p. 177, post.

when the appropriation made by one party is not made by the previous authority of the other, a subsequent assent thereto by the latter party is necessary (s).

An appropriation takes place where the goods are situate at the time of the appropriation, not where the contract of sale is made, or where one party assents to an appropriation by the other (t).

302. An authority given by one party to the other to appropriate the goods is an implied assent by the party giving the authority to a subsequent appropriation by the other (a), provided the appropriation be made in accordance with the contract (b). Such an authority confers an election on the party authorised (c).

An authority to appropriate is presumed where, by the terms of the contract, one party is to do with reference to the goods some act or thing which cannot be done until the goods are appropriated. When the party authorised has determined his election by doing such act or thing, the appropriation is finally made (d). Until that time any act or thing done with reference to the goods towards appropriation by the party authorised is revocable (e), unless it has, previous to its revocation, been assented to by the other party (f).

The question whether any act or thing done with reference to the goods is a final determination of an election to appropriate, or merely indicates a revocable intention to appropriate, is one of law (g).

303. Unless a different intention appears (h), where, in pursuance of the contract (i), the seller delivers the goods (k) to the buyer (l), or to a carrier (m) or other bailee, whether named by the buyer or not (n), for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, and does not reserve the right of disposal (o), he is deemed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract (p).

304. Where there is a contract purporting to be a present sale of future goods (q), and, when the goods come into existence or are acquired, the seller delivers them to the buyer (r), or otherwise

(f) This point was not decided in Borrowman v. Free (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 500, C. A., but is in accordance with principle, an irregular appropriation being an offer of a new contract (Cunliffe v. Harrison (1851) 6 Exch. 903, per PARKE, B., at p. 906).

(shipment and payment against shipping documents): Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works, Bindshedler, [1898] A. C. 200 (foreign parcel-post office). The carrier is prima facie the buyer's agent. If the terms of the contract or appropriation show that the carrier is the seller's agent, the appropriation is revocable, and the property does not pass until delivery (Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works, Bindshedler, supra).

(n) These words should be read subject to the preceding words, "in pursuance of the contract." Thus, if the buyer names the carrier, the seller does not duly pursue his authority to appropriate if he deliver to another carrier (Ullock, Lancaster & Co. v. Reddelein (1828), Dan. & Ll. 6).

appropriates them to him (s), or the buyer takes possession of them by the authority, given by the terms of the contract or subsequently thereto, of the seller, the property in the goods is thereupon transferred to the buyer (t).

Where, however, the future goods are such as have, at the date of the contract, a potential existence, the property in them is primâ facie transferred to the buyer when they come into existence, so as to be capable of identification, without any further act of appropriation (a).

Goods are in potential existence when they are the natural product, or expected increase, of something owned or possessed by the seller at the time of the contract, such as the hay or wheat to be grown in his field, the wool to be clipped from his existing sheep,

The interest of the buyer under the contract previous to seizure is assignable (Basset v. Maynard, supra; Muskett v. Hill (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 694). As between the seller and the buyer, an equitable interest passes to the buyer by virtue of the contract as soon as the goods come into existence, or are acquired, and can be identified (Holroyd v. Marshall, supra; Collyer v. Isaacs (1881), 19 Ch. D. 342, 354, C. A.; Clements v. Matthews (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 808, C. A.; Tailby v. Official Receiver (1888), 13 App. Cas. 523). Pew* (1871), 108 Massachusetts Reports, 347 (halibut to be caught not potential). If the existence of the future thing is possible only, it has no potential existence (Robinson v. Macdonnell, supra, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.). The property passes when the goods are "extant" (Grantham v. Hawley, supra). The rule has been recognised in America in recent times (Briggs v. United States (1891), 143 United States Reports, 346, 354; Butt v. Ellett (1873), 19 Wallace [86 United States Reports], 544; Rochester Distilling Co. v. Rasey (1894), 142 New York Reports, 570), and has been held to include such future goods as unborn animals, hay, manure of sheep, cotton etc. The court in Rochester Distilling Co. v. Rasey, supra, held that the rule did not apply to annual products, such as potatoes. It would seem that the seller must have a present interest in a thing, out of which the future product would, in the ordinary course of events, be expected naturally to spring, as under the emptio rei speratae of the civil law, which is probably the origin of the doctrine. The rule is perfectly logical, because ex hypothesi the goods contracted for are not generic, but as specific from the first as the future crop of potatoes in Howell v. Coupland the milk to be given by his existing cows, the young to be produced by his existing animals, and similar products (b).

Where, however, the subject-matter of the contract is a product to be made or manufactured out of potentially existing future goods, a subsequent act of appropriation when the goods come into actual existence is primâ facie necessary (c).

305. Under a contract for the manufacture and sale of goods, the property in the goods and the materials (d) thereof does not, unless it be otherwise agreed (e), pass to the buyer until the goods have been finished and appropriated to the contract with the assent of both parties (f). Whether the goods have been finished depends upon the construction of the contract and the surrounding circumstances (f).

306. An intention that the property in an article to be manufactured and sold shall pass to the buyer at any stage before the completion of the manufacture may be gathered from the terms of the contract (g). Subject thereto, such an intention may be presumed where the price is made payable by instalments regulated according to particular stages of the work, and from the due payment of such price, and from the fact that the work during its progress has been inspected by or on behalf of the buyer (h).

(d) Atkinson v. Bell (1828), 8 B. & C. 277, per BAYLEY, J. 307. When an article in an incomplete state of manufacture has become the property of the buyer, materials subsequently added thereto become by accession the property of the buyer when, but not before, they have been affixed to, or become in a reasonable way part of, the article (i).

308. Under a contract for the sale of a quantity of goods the question whether the property passes in any part of the goods before the full quantity is made up depends upon whether successive appropriations of separate portions of the goods were contemplated, or whether the goods were contracted for only as an indivisible whole, to be appropriated as such (k). In particular, a contract for the sale of a cargo or boatload is primâ facie (l) a contract for the entire and indivisible loading as such of the vessel or boat on the particular voyage (m).

Quinton* (1842), 3 Man. & G. 825 (rudder), were on this point overruled by Wood v. Bell, supra. It is not sufficient that the materials have been finished, or marked, or numbered by the seller with reference to their future position as part of the article, or have been intended by him to form part thereof (Reid v. Macbeth and Gray, supra).

(k) Anderson v. Morice (1876), 1 App. Cas. 713 (cargo an indivisible whole); Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co. (1886), 12 App. Cas. 128, P. C. (cargo a divisible quantity); Aldridge v. Johnson (1857), 7 E. & B. 885 (sackloads); Langton v. Higgins (1859), 4 H. & N. 402 (bottles). A quantity of goods contracted for as an indivisible whole is like a chattel to be manufactured; see Anderson v. Morice, supra, per Lord HATHERLEY, at p. 733. Where the goods are so contracted for as an indivisible whole, the instalments are not "the goods" appropriated under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 5 (1), for there is no contract for the sale of them as separate entities; nor are they "the goods" delivered to a carrier under ibid., s. 18, r. 2 (Reid v. Macbeth and Gray, supra, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 232). Bryans v. Nix (1839), 4 M. & W. 775, is probably another illustration, in spite of the dictum of PARKE, B., ibid., at p. 793 ("or less"). If A. agrees to sell to B. an unascertained set of Meeson and Welsby's Reports, and hands B. the books, volume by volume, it seems to be evident that no property would pass in any volume until delivery of all.

(l) But the facts may show that "cargo" means merely a quantity, to be separately appropriated, equal to the capacity of the vessel (Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co., supra).

Nix*, supra (bargeload); compare Bourne v. Seymour (1855), 16 C. B. 337 (estimated quantity governing "cargo"). Goods to be place.

The fact that the goods are deliverable as a whole by the transfer to the buyer of a bill of lading, or other document representing the whole quantity, is relevant to show that the goods were contracted for as an indivisible whole (n).

The fact that successive instalments of goods are deliverable to the buyer during a period of time, especially when the earlier instalments would be consumed or otherwise dealt with before the completion of the full quantity, is relevant to show that the instalments were intended to be separately appropriated (o).

309. Where, by the terms of the contract for unascertained goods, the seller agrees to deliver the goods at a particular place, and no intention appears in the contract that the property shall pass previously to such delivery, the property does not pass unless and until delivery is made accordingly (p).

310. Where there is a contract for the sale of specific (q) or ascertained (r) goods, the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred (s).

For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties regard Familiar instances are: where a tradesman agrees to deliver goods at the customer's house (Ridgway v. Ward (1884), 14 Q. B. D. 110, per HAWKINS, J., at p. 119 (bread); compare Daniel v. Whitfield (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 408 (where the property passed before delivery); or to the customer over the counter (Addy v. Blake (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 478 (liquor)). The reason for the rule is that until delivery the appropriation is not complete, as till then the seller may change his mind.

(q) I.e., "goods identified and agreed upon at the time a contract of sale is made" (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1)).

(r) The term "ascertained goods," as contrasted with specific goods, may be intended to cover the case of goods which have become ascertained subsequently to the formation of the contract. To make them synonymous with "specific" is unnecessary, as "specific goods" are defined. The same collocation of words is found in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 52; see p. 272, post.

is to be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the circumstances of the case (t).

(ii.) Specific Goods in a Deliverable State.

311. Unless a different intention appears (a), where there is an unconditional (b) contract for the sale of specific goods (c) in a deliverable state (d), the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether the time of payment, or the time of delivery, or both, be postponed (e).

312. A non-severable contract for the sale of specific goods and of an interest in land is, with regard to the goods, primâ facie an agreement to sell only; and the transfer of the property in the goods is primâ facie conditional on the conveyance of the interest in land (f), even although separate prices may have been fixed for the goods and for the interest in land (g).

(e) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 1. This is the first presumptive rule to ascertain the intention of the parties under ibid., s. 17; see p. 174, ante. The French Civil Code, art. 1583, contains a similar provision. See Phillimore v. Barry (1808), 1 Camp. 513 (storage free for thirty days); Tarling v. Baxter (1827), 6 B. & C. 360; Gurr v. Cuthbert (1843), 12 L. J. (EX.) 309 (rick of hay not to be cut till paid for); Sweeting v. Turner (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 310 (sale at auction). In cases under this rule the appropriation by the parties is a purely mental one (Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Hickson, [1906] A. C. 419, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 424; Dixon v. Yates (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 313, per PARKE, B., at p. 340).

(f) Lanyon v. Toogood (1844), 13 M. & W. 27 (house and furniture); Sleddon v. Cruikshank (1846), 16 M. & W. 71 (assignment of lease and sale of greenhouse); see also Corder v. Drakeford (1811), 3 Taunt. 382 (document creating lease and sale of goods: stamp); Vaughan v. Hancock (1846), 3 C. B. 766 (lease of house and sale of furniture and fixtures). The buyer must, however, pay for the goods if, without a conveyance of the interest in land, he has appropriated them (Sleddon v. Cruikshank, supra).

(g) Neal v. Viney (1808), 1 Camp. 471 (purchase of lease and crops); Salmon v. Watson (1819), 4 Moore (C. P.), 43 (account stated). It is of importance to notice that all the cases are concerned with entire agreements for an interest in land together with chattels in some way connected therewith.

(i) Secus, where no such act is required or obligatory on the seller, as where it is merely for the satisfaction of the buyer (Swanwick v. Bates (1863), 2 H. & C. 200 (weighing clay by buyer after delivery)). But, if the seller is bound to do the act, it cannot be done by the buyer without the seller's consent (Acraman v. Morrice (1849), 8 C. B. 449).

something (k) to the goods for the purpose (l) of putting them into a deliverable state (m), the property does not pass until such thing be done and the buyer have notice (n) thereof (o).

The principle of this rule applies also where a specific chattel which is partially manufactured at the time of the contract is by the contract to be completed by the seller (p); and also where, subsequently to a contract for the manufacture and sale of a chattel, the parties agree that the specific partially manufactured chattel, and no other, shall be the subject-matter of the contract (q).

314. Unless a different intention appears (r), where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods in a deliverable state (s), but the seller is bound (a) to weigh, measure, test, or do some other act or thing (b) with reference to (c) the goods for the purpose of (k) This word would seem to contemplate some act done directly to the goods, and not merely an act done "with reference to them," as under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 3; see note (e), p. 177, post. In Anderson v. Morice (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 609, Ex. Ch., BLACKBURN and LUSH, JJ., were of opinion that, in a contract for the sale of a cargo, the completing of the loading was an act to put the goods in a deliverable state; but see S. C. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 713, per Lord SELBORNE, at p. 749.

(l) Thus, the fact that the seller is to pay warehouse or wharfage rent for the goods does not suspend the passing of the property (Hammond v. Anderson (1803), 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 69; Greaves v. Hepke (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 131), nor the fact that he is to pay custom duties (Hinde v. Whitehouse (1806), 7 East, 558), or retains the warrants for that purpose (North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. v. Moffatt (1871), L. R. 7 C. P. 25).

(n) The provision as to notice is an addition to the common law.

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 2. See, for examples (subject to the statutory provision as to notice), Rugg v. Minett (1809), 11 East, 210 (filling up casks); Smith v. Surman (1829), 9 B. & C. 561 (timber to be felled by seller); Acraman v. Morrice (1849), 8 C. B. 449 (severing sold parts of timber); Laidler v. Burlinson (1837), 2 M. & W. 602 (completing ship); Brown Brothers v. Carron Co. (1898), 6 Scots Law Times, 231 (steam crane to be altered by seller); compare Young v. Matthews (1866), L. R. 2 C. P. 127 (bricks to be burnt: intention to pass property immediately).

(p) Laidler v. Burlinson, supra. Such cases fall more naturally under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 2, than under ibid., r. 5 (1).

(q) Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1, per PARKE, B., at pp. 8, 9. For forms of agreement as to acceptance, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 591, 594.

(r) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18 (covering words).

(a) See remarks on the same word in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 2; see note (i), p. 175, ante.

(b) A merely mental act, such as counting the items of a specific lot of goods, would seem not to be "an act or thing"; see the case of the flock of sheep put forward by Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., and CHANNELL, J., in R. v. Tideswell, [1905] 2 K. B. 273, C. C. R., at pp. 277, 279. Nor is the adding up of separate sums previously ascertained "an act or thing" (Tansley v. Turner (1835), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 151).

(c) The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 2, says "to the goods"; ibid., s. 18, r. 3, seems to be wider.

ascertaining the price (d), the property does not pass until such act or thing be done and the buyer has notice thereof (e).

The fact that the parties have agreed upon a provisional estimate of the price of the goods, the actual amount whereof is to be afterwards more exactly calculated, is relevant to prove a common intention that the transfer of the property shall not depend upon the final adjustment of the price (f).

315. Under a contract for the sale of a specific thing which is attached to, or forms part of, land at the time of the contract, and which is to be severed by the buyer, the property in the thing passes to the buyer on his severance of the thing from the land (g).

316. Where the passing of the property in specific goods is made dependent on full payment by the buyer of the price, which is payable by instalments, the buyer may, unless it be otherwise agreed, at any time anticipate the payment of any unpaid balance of the price (h).

(d) Where the quantity is known, weighing is not necessary to ascertain the price (Swanwick v. Sothorn (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 895), nor where the goods are sold for a lump sum (Hanson v. Meyer (1805), 6 East, 614, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 627, citing Hammond v. Anderson (1803), 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 69). But sometimes weighing is necessary to ascertain the identity of the goods: the case then falls under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 16, 18, r. 5 (1).

(e) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 3. See, subject to the statutory provision as to notice, for examples, Hanson v. Meyer, supra (weighing starch sold at price per cwt.); Zagury v. Furnell (1809), 2 Camp. 240 (counting of skins sold at price per dozen); Simmonds v. Swift (1826), 5 B. & C. 857 (stack sold at price per ton); Withers v. Lyss (1815), 4 Camp. 237 ("30 tons (more or less) of rosin at 13s. 9d. a cwt."); Logan v. Le Mesurier (1847), 6 Moo. P. C. Washburn* (1856), 73 Massachusetts Reports, 187 (growing grass); see also Phillips v. Morrison (1844), 12 M. & W. 740 (coal). The position of the buyer seems to be that he has a chattel interest in the thing before severance (Jones (James) & Sons, Ltd. v. Tankerville (Earl), supra, per PARKER, J., at pp. 443, 444). This interest is assignable (Muskett v. Hill (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 694). It is not an interest in land (Marshall v. Green (1875), 1 C. P. D. 35; but compare Morgan v. Russell & Sons, [1909] 1 K. B. 357 (slack etc. forming actual part of land)). The case in the text falls under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 17; ibid., s. 18, rr. 1, 2, do not apply; see pp. 175, 176, ante. When property passes.

317. Either party may, by the terms of an agreement to sell specific goods, have, in a specified event, an option to treat the agreement to sell as a sale (i). Thus, for example, where the seller has, on the buyer's default in paying the price, or part thereof, the option either to rescind the agreement or to sue the buyer for the price of the goods, and elects to sue for the price, his election, unless it be otherwise expressly agreed, passes the property in the goods to the buyer (k).

(v.) Specific Goods Delivered on Approval or on Sale or Return.

318. Unless a different intention appears (l), when goods are delivered (m) to the buyer (n) on approval, or "on sale or return" (o); or other (p) similar terms, the property therein passes (q) to the buyer—

(1) when he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller (r), or does any other act adopting the transaction (s); appropriate it to the price of other goods, as the maxim solvitur in modum solventis applies (Lancashire Waggon Co., Ltd. v. Nuttall (1879), 40 L. T. 291; Croft v. Lumley (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 672).

(i) See McEntire v. Crossley Brothers, [1895] A. C. 457, 464; see also Bianchi v. Nash (1836), 1 M. & W. 545; Bevington v. Dale (1902), 7 Com. Cas. 112 (both cases of bailments).

(k) See McEntire v. Crossley Brothers, supra; see also Walker v. Clyde (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 381 (where the seller elected to take back the goods). In the former case the goods had been delivered, but the principles stated in the text doubtless apply where the goods have not been delivered.

(m) Delivery to a carrier is not in this case delivery to the buyer, as it is under ibid., s. 32 (see p. 222, post), so far at least as the computation of the time for rejection is concerned (Jacobs v. Harbach (1886), 2 T. L. R. 419).

(n) The person called a "buyer" here is really only a bailee, as he has not bought or agreed to buy, but has merely an option to buy (Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A. C. 471; Edwards (Percy), Ltd. v. Vaughan (1910), 26 T. L. R. 545, C. A. (both cases under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9)). The position of the seller is that he has made an irrevocable offer to sell (Kirkham v. Attenborough, Kirkham v. Gill, [1897] 1 Q. B. 201, C. A., per Lord Esher, M.R., at p. 203), and so cannot require a return of the goods, unless, e.g., a course of dealing allows him to do so; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; p. 279, post.

(o) Whether a delivery is made under a contract for "sale or return" etc. depends upon the effect of the transaction as a whole; the fact that it is called "sale or return" is not conclusive, it may be an agency to sell for the bailor (Weiner v. Harris, [1910] 1 K. B. 285, C. A.). Again, the fact that the transaction is called an "agency" does not show that it may not be really one of sale or return (Re Nevill, Ex parte White (1871), 6 Ch. App. 397; affirmed, sub nom. Towle & Co. v. White (1873), 29 L. T. 78, H. L.). These two cases should be compared; see also Re Smith, Ex parte Bright (1879), 10 Ch. D. 566, C. A., where a del credere agency is distinguished from a sale. The fact that the agent is remunerated by the profit on a resale does not make him the buyer (ibid.); and see, generally, title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 152 et seq.

(q) Consequently, until that time the seller is the person to sue the carrier if the goods are lost in transit (Swain v. Shepherd (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 223 (goods sent on approval)).

(r) Swain v. Shepherd, supra. These words in the text, supra, include a verbal approval. It is noticeable that a verbal approval is by implication treated as an act, which perhaps is not the case with regard to an acceptance under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4; see p. 129, ante.

What is a reasonable time is a question of fact (c).

319. A delivery of goods is not made on terms similar to a delivery on approval, or “on sale or return,” unless the effect of the transaction is that the bailee has the option of becoming the owner of the goods, and on terms substantially the same as those already mentioned (d). Accordingly the following cases are not within that rule (e):—

(1) A delivery of goods to a bailee on the terms that, if they are not returned within a fixed or a reasonable time, the bailor shall have the option of treating them as sold, in which case the option, if the goods are not returned, rests with the bailor only, and the property passes when he exercises it (f);

(2) A delivery of goods to a bailee on the terms that the bailee shall have the option of becoming the owner of the goods on, for example, payment in cash, or his being charged for the goods in

v. Attenborough, Kirkham v. Gill, [1897] 1 Q. B. 201, C. A. (pledging of goods by bailee). For the meaning of “act adopting the transaction,” see p. 180, post. It may be also expressly provided what act shall be considered to be one adopting the transaction, as, e.g., a sale of the goods by the bailee (Re Nevill, Ex parte White (1871), 6 Ch. App. 397).

(t) A refusal to agree to the price is a rejection, and the bailee’s option of purchase is thereupon determined (Bradley and Cohn, Ltd. v. Ramsay & Co. (1911), 28 T. L. R. 13). An actual return of the goods may be necessary by an express agreement; see Ornstein v. Alexandra Furnishing Co. (1895), 12 T. L. R. 128.

account, or the goods being invoiced to him (g), or on payment in full of instalments of rent for the hire of the goods (h);

(3) A sale of goods on the terms that the buyer shall have the power of rejecting the goods, and revesting the property in them in the seller, if the goods are not approved (i).

320. An “act adopting the transaction” means an act indicating an election on the part of the bailee to become the buyer of the goods, or otherwise inconsistent with his being other than the buyer thereof (k), as, for example, a sale or pledge of them, or any other unauthorised act in relation thereto which, or the result of which, is inconsistent with a free power to return them according to the express or implied terms of the bailment (l).

A delivery of the goods to a third person for a special purpose consistent with the terms of the original bailment is therefore not an act adopting the transaction, even although the bailee is thereby unable to return the goods; nor does the bailee in such circumstances retain them (m).

Loss etc.

321. A bailment of goods on approval, sale or return, or similar terms, does not, unless it be otherwise agreed (n), become a sale of the goods by reason that, while in the possession of the bailee, they have perished or been damaged, if the loss or damage was not caused by the bailee’s act or default (o).

(h) Under a hire-purchase agreement not containing any agreement to buy, as in Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A. C. 471. If the bailee binds himself to pay the instalments of “rent,” there is an agreement to buy and the case falls under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 17 (Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. 318, C. A.); as to hire-purchase, see titles BAILMENTS, Vol. I., pp. 554 et seq.; BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., pp. 12, 13; MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 119.

SECT. 1.

passing of
property.

322. Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods (p), or where goods are subsequently appropriated (q) to the contract, the seller may, by the terms of the contract or appropriation (r), reserve the right of disposal (s) of the goods until certain conditions are fulfilled. In such a case, notwithstanding the delivery of the goods to the buyer (t), or to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer (a), the property in the goods does not pass to the buyer until the conditions imposed by the seller are fulfilled (b).

The fact that, by reserving the right of disposal by the terms of the appropriation, the seller is committing a breach of contract is, in relation to the passing of the property, immaterial (c).

323. Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the order of the seller or his agent, the seller is primâ facie deemed to reserve the right of disposal (d).

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 5 (1); p. 168, ante.

(r) These words are not, it is conceived, to be interpreted reddendo singula singulis. Thus "terms of the contract" should apply both to specific and to subsequently appropriated goods.

(s) This term is a translation of jus disponendi, found in the cases with reference only to shipment under bills of lading. But the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (1), is a general provision not confined to cases of shipment, notwithstanding that ibid., s. 19 (2), (3), are so confined.

(Q. B.) 643 (specific goods: payment before delivery); see also the cases on shipment cited in note (d), infra. Where the performance of some obligation by the buyer is not made a condition of the transfer of the property, and the property passes, it is not re-vested in the seller by the buyer's subsequent default (Key v. Cotesworth (1852), 7 Exch. 595; Re Tappenbeck, Ex parte Banner (1876), 2 Ch. D. 278, C. A.), unless there be an agreement to that effect (Newington v. Levy (1870), L. R. 6 C. P. 180, Ex. Ch. (d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (2). The case set out in this provision is a particular instance of the general rule laid down in ibid., s. 19 (1). The same principle applies generally where the seller takes in his own name, or in that of his agent, a mate's receipt, boat-master's receipt, or other document giving control of the goods (e).

324. Where by the terms of the contract or of the appropriation of the goods by the seller the delivery of the goods, or of a document giving control of the goods, is to be in exchange for payment of, or security for, the price of the goods, the seller, unless a contrary intention appears (f), reserves the right of disposal, (shipment "free on board": cash against bill of lading: refusal to pay); Re Tappenbeck, Ex parte Banner (1876), 2 Ch. D. 278, C. A. (bill of lading sent direct to buyer with advice of bill of exchange); Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank (1878), 3 Ex. D. 164, C. A. (bill of lading transferred to purchasers of bill of exchange drawn on buyer: tender of price by buyer); compare Wait v. Baker, supra; Rew v. Payne, Douthwaite & Co. (1885) 53 L. T. 932 (bill of lading and bill of exchange sent through seller's agent: wrongful dealing by buyer with cargo); Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A. (direct transmission to buyer of both documents); König v. Brandt (1901), 84 L. T. 748, C. A. (direct transmission of bill of lading: advice of bill of exchange). Where the intention to reserve the right of disposal is otherwise clear, such intention is not rebutted by the invoice stating the goods to have been shipped "on account of and at the risk of the buyer," or, where they are shipped in the buyer's ship, by the bill of lading stating them to be "freight free as buyer's property" (Shepherd v. Harrison, supra; Turner v. Liverpool Docks (Trustees), supra).

(e) Craven v. Ryder (1816), 6 Taunt. 433; Ruck v. Hatfield (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 632; Falk v. Fletcher (1865) 18 C. B. (N. s.) 403; Schuster v. McKellar (1857), 7 E. & B. 704 (all cases of mate's receipts). In Bryans v. Nix (1839), 4 M. & W. 775 (boat's receipt), PARKE, B., at p. 791, shows that there is no distinction between bills of lading, or carriers' or wharfingers' receipts, or any other kind of document, as evidence of an intention to pass the property in goods. Such documents as mate's receipts, when held by the owner of the goods, are like title deeds (Hathesing v. Laing, Laing v. Zeden (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 92, per BACON, V.-C., at p. 106). Secus, where held by a person having no property therein (ibid.). Thus, the retention of the mate's receipt by the seller after the property has passed to the buyer by shipment of the goods and a bill of lading made out in the buyer's name does not reserve to the seller any right in or over the goods (Cowasjee v. Thompson (1845), 5 Moo. P. C. C. 165). See the general principle of the proposition in the text stated in Bryans v. Nix, supra, at p. 791.

(f) As where the seller intends only to preserve his lien (Browne v. Hare (1859), 4 H. & N. 822, Ex. Ch.; Re Middleton, Ex parte Middleton (1864), and the property in the goods, until payment or security be made or given accordingly (g).

In particular (h), where the seller of goods draws on the buyer for the price, and transmits the bill of exchange and bill of lading (i) to the buyer together, to secure (k) acceptance of payment of the bill of exchange, the buyer is bound to return the bill of lading if he does not honour the bill of exchange, and if he wrongfully retains the bill of lading the property in the goods does not pass to him (l).

Heintzmann* (1864), 17 C. B. (N. S.) 56.

(h) These two words are not in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), but ibid., s. 19 (3), is only a particular instance of the general common law rule stated above.

(i) The language of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (3), is perfectly general; its application should, it is submitted, not be confined to cases under ibid., s. 19 (2), i.e., where the bill of lading is taken to the order of the seller or his agent. Ibid., s. 19 (3), seems to enact a particular instance of the main rule in ibid., s. 19 (1). If the seller sends an unindorsed bill of lading he in effect sends none (Shepherd v. Harrison (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 196, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 204; Brandt v. Bowlby (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 932). Similarly, if he sends an unstamped bill of lading (Moakes v. Nicolson, supra).

(k) "To secure" means "in order to secure," and not "so as to secure." There would therefore be a question of fact.

Where the bill of lading is directly transmitted to the buyer, the appropriation of the goods by the seller is not conditional on the acceptance of a bill of exchange merely because the buyer is advised that a bill of exchange has been or will be drawn upon him for the price (m).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Transfer of Bills of Lading and Other Documents.

Transfer of property by bill of lading.

325. Where goods have been shipped and a bill of lading (n) has been signed therefor, the property in the goods may, so long as the voyage continues, be transferred by a transfer of the bill of lading, made according to its tenor (o), and with the intention of passing thereby the property in the goods (p). The transfer may, however, imperative that the bill of lading should pass through the hands of the seller's agent (Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.). This was, as a general rule, necessary before the Act (Key v. Cotesworth (1852), 7 Exch. 595, 607; Re Tappenbeck, Ex parte Banner (1876), 2 Ch. D. 278, 288, C. A.), and it was so transmitted in Shepherd v. Harrison (1871), L. R. 5 H. L. 116, on which the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (3), is based. But compare Bryans v. Nix (1839), 4 M. & W. 775, where there was a direct transmission to the buyer of a bill of exchange and a boat receipt. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (3), does not deal with the case where a bill of lading is sent to the buyer with advice only of the bill of exchange (see Key v. Cotesworth, supra; Re Tappenbeck, Ex parte Banner, supra; König v. Brandt (1901), 84 L. T. 748, C. A.), or where the buyer, on the receipt of the bill of lading, is to pay cash or to send a banker's draft (see Wilmshurst v. Bowker (1844), 7 Man. & G. 882, Ex. Ch.), or to make a promissory note. In all these cases it would, it seems, be a question of fact whether the delivery of the document was intended to be in exchange for payment, and the property, and not merely a lien, was intended to be secured. If the buyer wrongfully takes possession of and deals with the goods, he is guilty of a conversion, and the seller may recover their value, subject, however, to a deduction for expenses incurred by him, and which the seller himself would have incurred, such as freight and landing charges (Rew v. Payne, Douthwaite & Co. (1885), 53 L. T. 932; Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus Brothers & Co., [1892] A. C. 166, 170, 174, 186, per Lords MACNAGHTEN and WATSON; New York Breweries Co. v. A.-G., [1899] A. C. 62, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C.; see also Hjort v. Bott (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 86).

(n) A bill of lading is a symbol of the goods represented thereby (Burdick v. Sewell (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 159, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 171; Sanders v. Maclean (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 327, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 341. It is not a symbol of the right of property; that depends upon the contract. Thus, the issue by the master of a bill of lading without the seller's consent is ineffectual (Craven v. Ryder (1816), 6 Taunt. 433; Ruck v. Hatfield (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 632; Schuster v. McKellar (1857), 7 E. & B. 704). As to the stamp, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

(o) If the bill be to order, by indorsement and delivery; if indorsed in blank, by delivery (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 11).

(p) Sewell v. Burdick (1884), 10 App. Cas. 74. The transfer for value of a bill of lading is prima facie evidence that the property passed thereby (Dracachi v. Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 190). Even where the bill of lading has been signed, its transfer is not essential to the passing of the property. The other facts of the case may show that the property has passed (Dick v. Lumsden (1793), Peake, 250 [189]; Meyer be made with the intention of passing the property conditionally, or for a specific purpose only, and not for the purpose of passing the property in the goods (q).

The voyage is deemed to continue so long as the goods are in the custody of the master of the vessel, or of some person on his behalf, and until possession of the goods has been taken by or on behalf of the person entitled to demand it (r).

326. When two or more parts of a bill of lading are signed by the master, and such parts are transferred to two or more transferees in good faith and for value, the property in the goods, if it was intended to pass, passes to the transferee who is first in point of time (s); but no liability is imposed upon any person having the custody of the goods who, in good faith and without notice of any prior claim, delivers the goods in exchange for that part of the bill of lading which is first presented to him (t).

Where the bill of lading is transferred to the buyer, the property passes, strictly speaking, by the contract and not by the transfer of the bill (Sewell v. Burdick, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 74, per Lord BRAMWELL, at p. 105; Jenkyne v. Usborne (1844), 7 Man. & G. 678, 697). A lien may also be preserved by means of a bill of lading, although the property passes (London Joint Stock Bank v. British Amsterdam Maritime Agency (1910), 16 Com. Cas. 102). As to the transfer of a bill of lading for goods at the time unascertained, see Hayman & Son v. M'Lintock, [1907] S. C. 936.

(q) Thus it may be shown that the seller reserved the right of disposal under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19(2) (see p. 181, ante), or coupled the transfer with the condition of acceptance of a bill of exchange under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19(3) (see p. 183, ante; Bateman v. Green (1867), 2 I. R. C. L. 166 (delivery of bill of lading expressly subject to acceptance of bill)). Or it may be shown that the transfer was by way of pledge (Sewell v. Burdick, supra; Bristol and West of England Bank v. Midland Rail. Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 653, C. A. (pledge of bill of lading, and transfer over by pledgee)), or for another special purpose (Hibbert v. Carter (1787), 1 Term Rep. 745 (transfer to creditor to bind proceeds of goods); Waring v. Cox (1808), 1 Camp. 369; Morison v. Gray (1824), 2 Bing. 260 (transfer to agent to stop in transitu), explained in Burgos v. Nascimento (1908), 100 L. Absolute bill.

328. A sale of goods may be made by deed, and the property in the goods will, subject to any contrary intention, pass to the buyer on the execution of the deed, unless it be delivered as an escrow. Such a deed is called a bill of sale (e).

holder to receive the goods. In such a case it is not a warrant, and a fortiori its issue or transfer can have no effect on the property in the goods (Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491); see the definition of a warrant (ibid.), and compare the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 111.

(b) As between the seller and a second buyer, the property may pass under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), ss. 9, 10. The wharfinger or warehouseman etc. in possession of the goods may, by his acknowledgment to the buyer of a warrant or delivery order, be estopped from denying that the goods are the buyer's property; see Stonard v. Dunkin (1809), 2 Camp. 344 (goods not measured: written acknowledgment by warehouseman); Hawes v. Watson (1824), 2 B. & C. 540 (goods unweighed: written acknowledgment to second buyer); Gillett v. Hill (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 530 (goods unascertained: attornment to delivery order); Henderson & Co. v. Williams, [1895] 1 Q. B. 521, C. A. (seller not owner; warehouseman's acknowledgment to buyer). See the law considered in Knights v. Wiffen (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 660; and see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 21 (1); p. 192, post; title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., p. 408.

Lyss* (1815), 4 Camp. 237 (delivery order to weigh and ascertain price of specific goods); Hayman & Son v. M'Lintock, [1907] S. C. 936 (delivery order for portion of larger bulk); compare Swanwick v. Sothorn (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 895 (delivery order for ascertained goods). These documents cannot have a greater effect than a bill of lading, which does not per se transfer the property. The property may pass also without a transfer of a warrant (North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. v. Moffatt (1871), L. R. 7 C. P. 25); as to the nature, generally, of the documents mentioned, see pp. 193, 225, post. Under certain private Acts of Parliament the indorsee of a warrant or certificate issued by a warehouseman is deemed to be the owner of the deposited goods (see London and St. Katharine Docks Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. clxxviii.), ss. 106, 108), or to have the same right to the possession and property in the goods as if they were deposited in his own warehouse. But these provisions do not, it is conceived, affect the question of the transfer of the property as between the seller and the buyer; see the Law Quarterly Review, Vol. VIII., p. 302. For forms of delivery order, warrant or certificate, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 604 et seq.

SUB-SECT. 7.—The Effect of a Sale.

SECT. 1.

Transfer of the Property from Seller to Buyer.

Prima facie transfers all rights and liabilities.

329. The completion of the sale confers upon the buyer in respect of the goods all the rights and liabilities (f) of an owner. Subject, therefore, as between him and the seller, to any special agreement, he is invested with full powers of using or of dealing with the goods (g), is entitled to all accretions and benefits attaching to them (h), and is subject to the risk of loss or damage (i).

The buyer's rights and liabilities as owner of the goods may, as between him and the seller, be limited by special agreement (k). Such an agreement does not, however, run with the property in the goods, so as to bind any subsequent buyer, even with notice thereof, or so as to qualify his right of property in the goods (l). But a patentee may, on the sale of the patented goods, by the terms of his licence to the buyer, restrict the user of the goods by the buyer, or by any subsequent buyer, even without notice of any limitation of the licence (m).

Isler*, [1906] 1 Ch. 605; National Phonograph Co. of Australia v. Menck (1911), 27 T. L. R. 239, P. C., where the general rule as to restrictions on rights of ownership and the cases are fully considered. The restrictions on ownership are not by virtue of any contract with the patentee; they are "a limitation of the grant of the licence to use" (British Mutoscope and Biograph Co., Ltd. v. Homer, [1901] 1 Ch. 671, per FARWELL, J.); and the restrictions are not presumed (National Phonograph Co. of Australia v. Menck, supra). A limitation of the right of user does not affect the right of property in the goods (British Mutoscope and Biograph Co., Ltd. v. Homer, supra, per FARWELL, J.). If there is no limitation of the licence, the buyer, and any subsequent buyer, may deal with the goods as if they were not the subject of a patent (Thomas v. Hunt (1864), 17 C. B. (N. S.) 183). As to implied authority to sell in small quantities goods subject to a trade-mark, and received from the manufacturer in bulk, see Condy and Mitchell, Ltd. v. Taylor & Co., Ltd. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 665; and see, generally, title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS, Vol. XXII., pp. 190 et seq.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Incidence of the Risk.(i.) In General.

330. Unless otherwise agreed (n), the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property (o) therein is transferred to the buyer; but where the property (o) is transferred to the buyer the goods are at his risk, whether delivery (p) has been made or not (q).

331. The fact that one party or the other is, by the terms of the contract, to insure the goods is relevant to show that it was intended that he should take the risk (r).

In particular, where goods are contracted for on the terms that they are to be shipped, and that the price is to include the amount of the freight, and the premium of insurance, the risk primâ facie (s) attaches to the buyer at and from the time of shipment of the goods (t).

332. Goods may, by agreement, be at the risk of the buyer although they are, at the time of the incidence of the risk, unascertained, and the property therein has, in consequence, not passed to the buyer (a).

(n) Martineau v. Kitching (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 436 (transfer of risk after two months); Castle v. Playford (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 98, Ex. Ch. (risk on receipt of bill of lading); Anderson v. Morice (1876), 1 App. Cas. 713 (risk only on completion of cargo). As to the risk of separate instalments of the goods in the course of delivery, see Anderson v. Morice, supra. Much the same considerations apply as where the question is whose is the property; see pp. 172, 173, ante.

(r) Fragano v. Long (1825), 4 B. & C. 219; Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 209, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 229; Anderson v. Morice (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 609, Ex. Ch., per QUAIN, J., at p. 613; (1876), 1 App. Cas. 713, per Lords O'HAGAN and SELBORNE, at pp. 773, 746.

(s) Not necessarily, for the seller may take the risk of delivery, as where the price is made payable only if the goods arrive; see p. 189, post.

(t) Under what is called a "c.f.i." (cost, freight, insurance) or "c.i.f." contract (Wancke v. Wingren (1889), 58 L. J. (Q. B.) 519; Tregelles v. Sewell (1862), 7 H. & N. 574; Corcoran v. Proser (1873), 22 W. R. 222, Ex. Ch., per LAWSON, J., at p. 223; Crozier, Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach, [1908] 2 K. B. 161, C. A., overruling Barrow v. Myers & Co. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 441; Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co., [1911] 1 K. B. 934, C. A., per KENNEDY, L.J. (dissenting), at p. 956; reversed, [1912] A. C. 18). Under such a contract the seller "takes the risk of a rise or fall in the price of the goods, or of freight for their carriage, or of the rate of insurance" (Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd. v. Public Works Commissioner, Public Works Commissioner v. Houlder Brothers & Co., Ltd., [1908] A. C. 276, P. C.). As to the nature of the contract, and the duties of the parties, see the explanation in Ireland v. Livingston (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 395, 406; Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co., [1911] 1 K. B. 214, per HAMILTON, J., at p. 220; and see pp. 211, 223, post.

333. Where, by the contract, the goods are to be shipped by the seller “free on board,” the risk primâ facie attaches to the buyer on the shipment, whether the goods are at that time specific or unascertained (b).

334. When the contract, expressly or by implication, provides that the price of the goods, or some part of it, shall be payable only if the goods arrive at their destination, or are actually delivered to the buyer, or on similar terms, the risk during the transit attaches to the seller, to the extent of so much of the price as is so contingently payable, although the property in the goods may have passed to the buyer (c).

The mere fact that the price is payable on the delivery of shipping documents (d), or at a time calculated with reference to the arrival of the goods at their destination (e), or their actual delivery to the buyer (f), or is to be ascertained by weighing, or the doing of some act or thing to or in relation to them after their arrival (g), does not throw the risk during transit on the seller (h).

335. If the price of the goods is payable before delivery, and no intention appears in the contract that the price shall be repaid, or shall cease to be payable, if delivery is not made, and delivery is not made, the buyer must bear the risk, where the seller agreed to deliver the goods only on a contingency, which fails without the seller’s fault (i), or, the goods being specific, the seller is discharged by law from delivering the goods (k).

Where the buyer is entitled in a certain event, under an express power, to revest the property in the goods in the seller, the risk of loss or damage to the goods, not caused by the buyer's fault, while they are in the buyer's possession, and before he has an opportunity of exercising his election, attaches to the seller as the contingent owner of the goods (m).

(ii.) Loss Caused by Delay in Delivery.

337. Where delivery (n) has been delayed through the fault (o) of either buyer or seller, the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might (p) not have occurred but for such fault (q).

p. 146, ante. The principle is a general one, and depends upon the rule of law that the doctrine in Taylor v. Caldwell (1863), 3 B. & S. 826, "only releases the parties from future performance of the contract. Therefore the doctrine of failure of consideration does not apply—the law treats the contract as a good and subsisting contract with regard to things done and rights accrued in accordance with it up to that time" (Chandler v. Webster, [1904] 1 K. B. 493, C. A., per COLLINS, M.R., at pp. 499, 500). The contract is not one which can be treated as rescinded ab initio (ibid., per ROMER, L.J., at p. 501). The principle has been applied in coronation seat cases (Chandler v. Webster, supra; Clark v. Lindsay (1903), 88 L. T. 198); to contracts for work and labour (Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. v. Rennie (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 271), to prepaid freight (Byrne v. Schiller (1871), L. R. 6 Exch. 319, Ex. Ch.), and to prepayment of school fees (Price v. Wilkins (1888), 58 L. T. 680); and see, further, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 430.

(n) Defined as "voluntary transfer of possession"; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); p. 119, ante.

(o) Defined as "wrongful act or default"; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); p. 120, ante. The word "wrongful" imports "the infringement of some right" (Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 598, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 612). "Default" is a purely relative term, like negligence (Re Young and Harston's Contract (1885), 31 Ch. D. 168, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 174), and has been defined, in the case of a sale of land, as "meaning nothing more, nothing less, than not doing what is reasonable under the circumstances—not doing something which you ought to do, having regard to the relations which you occupy towards the other persons interested in the transaction" (ibid.).

(p) Thus there need be no necessary connection between the delay and the loss; see McConihe v. New York and Erie Railroad Co. (1859), 20 New York State Reports, 495. The word "might" would seem to throw on the party in fault the onus of proving that the loss would have occurred if there had been no fault.

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20 (first proviso); see Rogers v. Van Hoesen (1815), 12 Johnson's Reports (New York), 221 (fish spoilt by seller's delay). This proposition is similar to that in the Civil law; see the French Civil Code, art. 1302, and the case of the horse struck (iii.) Liability of Either Party as Bailee.

338. Nothing in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 20, affects the duties and liabilities of either seller or buyer as a bailee of the goods of the other party (r).

A seller in possession of the buyer's goods is in respect thereof probably subject to the obligations of a bailee for reward until the expiration of the time expressly or by implication appointed for the buyer to take delivery. After the expiration of that time the seller is probably subject to the obligations of a gratuitous bailee (s).

Similarly, a buyer in possession of the seller's goods (a) is probably a bailee for reward until the expiration of the time expressly or by implication appointed for the passing of the property. After a rightful rejection of the goods, and the expiration of a reasonable time for the seller to remove them, the buyer, it is submitted, becomes a gratuitous bailee (b).

SECT. 2.—*Transfer of Title.*SUB-SECT. 1.—General Rule as to Title.

339. Subject to the other statutory provisions (c), and without by lightning in the seller's stables put in Pothier, Contrat de Vente, art. 58. It is not identical with the proposition in Martineau v. Kitching (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 436, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 456, where the learned judge speaks of delaying the passing of the property. Where the property has passed, the effect of the clause is probably to cast upon the seller, if he delays delivery, a liability from which he would ordinarily be exempt as a bailee of the buyer's goods, as, e.g., if the goods are stolen or burnt while in his possession.

(s) 3 Salk. 61; Koon v. Brinkerhoff (1886), 39 Hun, 130; Story on Sales, ss. 300 a, 300 b, 393; Pothier, Contrat de Vente, arts. 53–55; see also Wiehe v. Dennis Brothers (1913), 29 T. L. R. 250 (bailment after contract). As to the obligations of a bailee for reward, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., p. 544; Story on Bailments, ss. 23, 442; and of a gratuitous bailee, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 531 et seq.; Story on Bailments, ss. 23, 62, 79. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20, does not define the degree of responsibility of the seller or buyer, and there is little authority on the subject. On principle it would seem that the seller should be a bailee for reward, as part of the consideration for the price is the custody of the goods until the time of delivery; for the analogous case of a carrier who warehouses the goods on arrival without further charge, see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 21; and, as to the liability of a vendor of land before conveyance, see Clark v. Ramuz, [1891] 2 Q. B. 456, C. A.; and see title SALE OF LAND, pp. 363 et seq., post. After the time for the buyer to take the goods has elapsed the consideration for the custody is exhausted, the custody then becoming solely for the benefit of the buyer ("illud sciendum est, cum moram emptor adhibere coepit, jam non culpam sed dolum malum tantum præstandum a venditore" (Dig. 18, 6, 17; see also ibid., 18, 6, 5)).

(a) As, e.g., under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 4 (see p. 178, ante), or under a hire-purchase contract.

(b) This seems to follow from the principles stated in note (s), supra. BAYLEY, J., says in Okell v. Smith (1815), 1 Stark. 107, that, after a rightful rejection of the goods, the goods are at the risk of the seller. But it is conceived that the learned judge was thinking of accidents, and not of the obligations of the buyer as a bailee.

Transfer of Title.

340. Except in the case of dispositions under the Factors Act, 1889 (m), and also subject to any usage of trade (n), bills of lading, warrants, and delivery orders, and other similar documents, are not negotiable instruments that, by their transfer to a buyer, pass to him a better title to the goods than the seller had (o).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Common Law and Statutory Powers of Sale.

The following persons, not being owners, have, under conditions, power at common law to sell the goods of others, that is to say, pawnees, who may sell the goods pledged on the pawner's default (s); executors or administrators selling as such (a); sheriffs, who may after seizure sell the goods of the execution debtor in the execution of a writ (b); and masters of ships, who may sell the ship or cargo in cases of absolute necessity (c).

Statutory

The following persons have, subject to the provisions contained in the various Acts conferring the powers, statutory powers of sale, namely, high bailiffs of county courts with regard to goods seized in execution (d); sheriffs, by public auction only, unless it be otherwise ordered, where the goods are seized for a sum exceeding £20, including legal incidental expenses, or at a private sale by leave of a judge (e); distrainers for rent or rates (f); innkeepers for the (d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 22 (2). The law is regulated by stats. (1555) 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 7; (1588—9) 31 Eliz. c. 12. The language of stat. (1588—9) 31 Eliz. c. 12 is wider than that of stat. (1555) 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 7, and is not confined to the sale of stolen horses (2 Co. Inst. 717; Moran v. Pitt (1873), 42 L. J. (Q. B.) 47). Thus, the buyer in market overt of a horse not shown to have been stolen must prove as against the original owner that the regulations of stat. (1588—9) 31 Eliz. c. 12 were carried out (*Moran v. faith (f), and without notice (g) of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller (h).

If, after a sale in market overt, the seller becomes again the owner of the goods, the title of the original owner revives (i).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Sale or Pledge under a Voidable Title.

Seller or pledgor having void-able title.

344. Where the seller of goods has a voidable title (k) thereto, but his title has not been avoided (l) at the time of the sale, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith (m) and without notice (n) of the seller's defect of title (o).

(f) For the purposes of the Act, a thing is done "in good faith" if it be done "honestly, whether negligently or not" (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (2)).

(g) I.e., knowledge, whether actual or imputed; see Jones v. Gordon (1877), 2 App. Cas. 616.

(h) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 22 (1). Ibid., s. 22, does not apply to Scotland (ibid., s. 22 (3)). A title acquired in England or Ireland will, however, be recognised in Scotland (Todd v. Armour (1882), 9 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 901).

(i) 2 Co. Inst. 713.

(k) This expression "voidable title" has been defined as a title acquired under a de facto contract purporting to pass the property, but which is liable to be set aside, e.g., on the ground of fraud (Cundy v. Lindsay (1878), 3 App. Cas. 459, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 464; Kingsford v. Merry (1856), 11 Exch. 577, 579). A voidable title constitutes a real ownership, and not an apparent one within the order and disposition clause of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44 (Load v. Green (1846), 15 M. & W. 216 (decided under the Bankrupt Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 16), s. 72)); as to reputed ownership, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 173 et seq. A voidable title is thus distinguished from a void title, e.g., where fraud altogether nullifies consent to a contract, and so creates no title at all, as where there is mistake as to the identity of the person contracted with (Cundy v. Lindsay, supra), or where a person professing to be agent for a named person, with whom alone the owner professes to deal, obtains fraudulent possession of the goods (Higgons v. Burton (1857), 26 L. J. (EX.) 342; Hardman v. Booth (1863), 1 H. & C. 803; Morrison v. Robertson, [1908] S. C. 332). So also, in the absence of fraud, the owner of goods may intend to pass to another only the possession and not the property in the goods (Boyson v. Coles (1817), 6 M. & S. 14).

(l) A person may elect to avoid or affirm a contract at any time after he knows of the fraud, and until, either expressly or by implication, he affirms the contract. So long as he does not affirm it, he may keep the matter open, subject to any intervening rights of third persons (Clough v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1871), L. R. 7 Exch. 26, Ex. Ch.). He may avoid the contract even after notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the other parties, and whether before or after a receiving order, for the trustee takes only the voidable title (Re Eastgate, Ex parte Ward, [1905] 1 K. B. 465; Tilley v. Bowman, Ltd., [1910] 1 K. B. 745). After avoidance the fraudulent buyer cannot bring detinue against the seller, but the seller must return the purchase-money paid, or set it off against the redemption moneys, where the goods have been pledged (Tilley v. Bowman, Ltd., supra). The seller may by his pleading elect to avoid the contract, and is not bound to do any act in pais. The avoidance takes place when the election is made and communicated to the other party (Clough v. London and North Western Rail. Co., supra; Scarf v. Jardine (1882), 7 App. Cas. 345, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 361).

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 23. Accordingly, the Similar principles apply to a pledgor, whose title is voidable by the person from whom he bought the goods. In such case the seller's right of avoiding the sale is subject to the rights of the buyer's pledgee in good faith and without notice (p).

A title may be voidable not only with respect to the whole right of property in the goods, but also with respect to a limited interest therein, as, for example, where the seller of goods has fraudulently obtained possession of them from a person having, as against him, a special property therein (q).

345. The owner of goods which, or the proceeds whereof, are subject to an equitable right of a third person may pass a good title thereto to a buyer in good faith and without notice of the equitable right (r).

seller with a voidable title may recover the price from the buyer (Hooper v. Lane (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 443, per BRAMWELL, B., at p. 462); see on this provision, Load v. Green (1846), 15 M. & W. 216 (avoidance by seller before buyer's disposition); White v. Garden (1851), 10 C. B. 919 (bill on fictitious person given in payment: buyer's resale); Stevenson v. Newnham (1853), 13 C. B. 285, Ex. Ch. (fraudulent preference: resale before avoidance); The Argentina (1867), L. R. 1 A. & E. 370 (resale and transfer of bill of lading by fraudulent buyer); Clough v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1871), L. R. 7 Exch. 26, Ex. Ch. (collusion by consignee with fraudulent buyer); Attenborough v. St. Katharine's Dock Co. (1878), 3 C. P. D. 450, C. A. (agreement by fraudulent buyer to pledge: equitable rights of third person); Moyce v. Newington (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 32 (buyer gives cheque on bank where no account); Loughnan v. Barry and Byrne (1872), 6 I. R. C. L. 457 (worthless cheque: trover by seller against buyer's agent); Babcock v. Lawson (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 284, C. A. (possession fraudulently obtained by pledgor who repledges to another); see also Zwinger v. Samuda (1817), 7 Taunt. 265; Pease v. Gloahec, The "Marie Joseph" (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 219 (sale by pledgor in fraudulent possession); King's Norton Metal Co. v. Edridge, Merrett & Co. (1897), 14 T. L. R. 98, C. A. (purchase by buyer under an alias); Tilley v. Bowman, Ltd., [1910] 1 K. B. 745 (representation that buyer had a customer). Notwithstanding the word "provided" in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 23, the burden is on the person seeking to avoid the contract to show that the sub-buyer or pledgee did not take in good faith (Whitehorn Brothers v. Davison, [1911] 1 K. B. 463, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J.). The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 23, covers part of the ground covered by ibid., s. 25 (2); see p. 201, post. Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25 (2), however, the buyer must be in possession of the goods or documents of title, and must deliver or transfer them to the third person. There is no such provision in ibid., s. 23; and see White v. Garden, supra, where the seller was in possession.

(p) Attenborough v. St. Katharine's Dock Co., supra; Tilley v. Bowman, Ltd., supra; Truman (W.), Ltd. v. Attenborough (1910), 26 T. L. R. 601; Whitehorn Brothers v. Davison, supra; and see the other cases cited in note (o), p. 196, ante. The same principle would apply to other dispositions by a buyer with a voidable title.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Revesting of Property in Stolen Goods.

Where goods
fraud.

346. Where goods (s) have been stolen (t) and the offender is prosecuted to conviction, the property in the goods subject to the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (a), reverts (b) in the person who was the owner of the goods or his personal representative, notwithstanding any intermediate dealing with them, whether by sale in market overt or (c) otherwise (d).

347. Notwithstanding any enactment to the contrary (e), where goods have been obtained by fraud, or other wrongful means not amounting to larceny (f), the property in such goods does not equitable right of seller in respect of proceeds of resale); Hathesing v. Laing, Laing v. Zeden (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 92 (transfer of bill of lading as against holder of mate's receipt); compare Lutscher v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 709 (no subsequent legal title).

(t) The expression "stolen" includes common law larceny, larceny by a trick, and larceny by a bailee under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 3; see the definition of larceny in title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 627; of larceny by a trick, ibid., p. 633; of larceny by a bailee, ibid., p. 631.

(a) 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 6; see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 437; see also R. v. Elliott, [1908] 2 K. B. 452.

(b) As from the time of the conviction; see title MARKETS AND FAIRS, Vol. XX., p. 55.

(c) As, e.g., by a purchase abroad which is valid by the lex loci; see p. 111, ante.

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (1); Scattergood v. Sylvester (1850), 15 Q. B. 506 (trover against buyer in market overt); and see, further, title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 686 et seq. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (1), is by ibid., s. 21 (2) (a), subject to the provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45); see p. 192, ante. Consequently a disposition by a buyer who has "agreed to buy" under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9 (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25 (2)), prevails against the owner's title on the conviction of the buyer for larceny as a bailee (Payne v. Wilson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 653; reversed on another point [1895] 2 Q. B. 537, C. A.). Where the property has not passed to the person in possession of the goods, as where he bought them out of market overt, the enactment in the text is not required (Vilmont v. Bentley (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 322, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R.; affirmed sub nom. Bentley v. Vilmont (1887), 12 App. Cas. 471 (decided on the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96))). Thus a bonâ fide buyer out of market overt of stolen goods is liable to the original owner in trover if he resell them, even before the conviction of the thief (Peer v. Humphrey (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 495; White v. Spettigue (1845), 13 M. & W. 603; Cundy v. Lindsay (1878), 3 App. Cas. 459; compare Horwood v. Smith (1788), 2 Term Rep. 750); see, generally, title TROVER AND DETINUE.

(e) These words repeal the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 27 (3), so far as they apply to the revesting of the property in goods obtained by means other than larcenous.

(f) The context shows that "fraud" is governed by the following words, and is confined in meaning to false pretences, the property being intended to pass to the offender. See the definition of larceny by a trick in title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 633, and of false pretences, ibid., pp. 634, 690. Where, therefore, the property does not pass to the offender the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (2), does not apply.

Where a person (i), having sold goods, continues, or is (k), in possession (i) of the goods, or of the documents of title (i) to the goods, the delivery or transfer (l) by that person, or by a mercantile agent (i) acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, or other disposition (i) thereof, or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving the same in good faith (i) and without notice (i) of the previous sale, has the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorised by the owner (m) of the goods to make the same (n).

(g) But it may on other grounds, as, e.g., where the owner has disaffirmed the offender's voidable title under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 23 (see p. 196, ante), before any innocent person has acquired a title to the goods (R. v. George (1901), 65 J. P. 729). The avoidance of the transaction may be by an application for restitution to the court which tries the offender (ibid.). If a third person has bonâ fide acquired a good title, as the property does not revest, so there can be no restitution order (R. v. Walker (1901), 65 J. P. 729). As to restitution orders, see, generally, title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 684 et seq., 702; and, as to the effect of appeals, see ibid., p. 437.

(h) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (2); see Parker v. Patrick (1793), 5 Term Rep. 175 (goods obtained by fraud and pledged: trover by pledgee against owner lies), as explained in Load v. Green (1846), 15 M. & W. 216, by PARKE, B., and approved in White v. Garden (1851), 10 C. B. 919; Moyce v. Newington (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 32 (passing of property: bonâ fide buyer before conviction has good title), a case which the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 24 (2), has re-established (R. v. Walker, supra); see also title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 685, 702.

(i) See the notes to the corresponding words in Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9; and see p. 200, post.

(k) This word shows that the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8, applies, not only to the case where the seller remains in possession of the goods or documents, but where he obtains them, semble, even tortiously, after the sale.

(l) What would seem to be contemplated is a physical delivery or transfer to the second donee after the sale to the buyer. It is not sufficient to change the character in which the second buyer or other donee already holds the goods, as, e.g., where the seller, after a sale to a third person, pledges the goods, which were before the sale in the possession of the pledgee (Nicholson v. Harper, [1895] 2 Ch. 415). Apparently, "delivery" applies to "goods," and "transfer" to documents of title (ibid., per NORTH, J., as reported in 73 L. T. 19); "transfer" may, however, apply to goods when conveyed by deed (Kitto v. Bilbie, Hobson & Co. (1895), 72 L. T. 266, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.). It should also be noticed that it is not the contract that is made valid under this section, but the delivery or transfer under the contract. Accordingly it is not necessary that the donee should enter into the contract on the faith of the documents of title (Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.).

(m) I.e., the buyer, the seller ex hypothesi "having sold."

(n) Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8; Nicholson v. Harper, supra. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25 (1), is identical, with the omission of the words "or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof" after "or other disposition

SUB-SECT. 7.—Disposition by Buyer in Possession.

349. Where a person (o), having bought or agreed to buy (p) goods, obtains, with the consent (q) of the seller, possession (r) of the goods or the documents of title (s) to the goods, the delivery or transfer (t) by that person, or by a mercantile agent (a) acting for him, or of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, thereof." The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8, extends the Factors Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 39), s. 3 (now repealed), which applied only to sellers in possession of documents of title, and was enacted to do away with the decision in Johnson v. Credit Lyonnais Co. (1877), 3 C. P. D. 32, C. A., that a seller was not "an agent entrusted." The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8, should be compared with the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (2); see p. 263, post. Under the latter clause the seller can pass a good title only if the original buyer be in default. Moreover, he is, it is conceived, under no liability to the original buyer for breach of contract, whereas, under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8, he is.

(o) The term "person" includes any body of persons, corporate or unincorporate (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (6)).

(p) Where the buyer has bought, no question of title can be involved, except that special rights may by agreement be reserved to the seller, consistent with the property and possession being in the buyer (Dodsley v. Varley (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 632). But where the buyer has only agreed to buy, the question of property is involved. The words "agreed to buy" do not include the delivery of goods on approval etc. under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 4 (see p. 178, ante), as ex hypothesi such a person has only an option to buy (Helby v. Matthews, [1895] A. C. 471; Edwards (Percy), Ltd. v. Vaughan (1910), 26 T. L. R. 545, C. A.). The buyer must bind himself to pay the price (Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. 318, C. A.), even although it may be called hire or rent (McEntire v. Crossley Brothers, [1895] A. C. 457). But it is sufficient if he has bound himself in fact, although the contract may be unenforceable by action under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (Hugill v. Masker (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 364, C. A.); see pp. 142, 143, ante.

(r) For the meaning of "possession" under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (2), see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 205, note (t). As to whether a buyer obtains possession of goods, within the meaning of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), where the contract is for a machine which is to be affixed to his land, so as to be a fixture, before the property passes, see Clark v. Bulmer (1843), 11 M. & W. 243.

(s) These words have the same meaning as in the Factors Acts (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1)); see p. 119, ante. The important words are the concluding ones. The document of title must represent the goods. As to documents "used as proof of the possession or control of goods" under the definition, see Re Hamilton Young & Co., Ex parte Carter, [1905] 2 K. B. 772, C. A.

(t) See the corresponding words in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8; and see p. 199, ante. "The transfer of a document may be by indorsement, or where the document is by custom or by its express terms transferable by delivery, or makes the goods deliverable to bearer, then by delivery" (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 11).

(a) The term "mercantile agent" has the same meaning as in the Factors Acts (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25 (3); see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 152). The word "his" in the definition (for which see ibid.) should be noted. It would seem that, where a disposition is made through a mercantile agent, the agent must be one whose ordinary business is to sell, consign, buy or pledge the particular class of goods. Had the words been "business of a mercantile agent" (as in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2 (1)), the agent's authority would be wider; see Oppenheimer v. Attenborough & Son, [1908] 1 K. B. 221, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 230.

or other disposition (b) thereof (c), or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving the same in good faith (d), and without notice (e) of any lien or other right (f) of the original seller in respect of the goods, has the same effect as if (g) the person making the delivery or transfer were a mercantile agent in possession of the goods or documents of title with the consent of the owner (h).

(b) The consideration for a sale, pledge, or other disposition "in pursuance of the Act" may be "either a payment in cash, or the delivery or transfer of other goods, or of a document of title to goods, or of a negotiable security, or any other valuable consideration" (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 5). For the definition of "pledge," see titles AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 205; PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 241. As the transaction under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9, must be by way of a delivery or transfer, an hypothecation is excluded. As to pledges for antecedent debts, or in exchange, see p. 202, post. An advance of the sale moneys by an auctioneer on a deposit of goods with him for sale is not a pledge (Waddington & Sons v. Neale & Sons (1907), 96 L. T. 786). By the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 3, "a pledge of the documents of title to goods shall be deemed to be a pledge of the goods." This provision primarily applies to pledges by mercantile agents, but it is conceived that it governs the case of a pledge by a buyer who has satisfied the conditions of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9 (Inglis v. Robertson, [1898] A. C. 616); see also title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., p. 240.

(c) The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25 (2), omits here "or under any agreement for sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof." BRUCE, J., decided in Shenstone & Co. v. Hilton, [1894] 2 Q. B. 452, that the words "agreement for sale" are not confined to agreements for sale by the person delivering the goods to the person receiving them, but include a delivery to an auctioneer for sale; but compare Waddington & Sons v. Neale & Sons, supra.

(d) For the definition, see p. 120, ante. In the case of joint disponees the bad faith of one of them is deemed to affect the title of all (Oppenheimer v. Frazer and Wyatt, [1907] 2 K. B. 50, C. A.).

(e) I.e., knowledge, actual, or imputed by reason of the means of knowledge being wilfully disregarded; see May v. Chapman (1847), 16 M. & W. 355, per PARKE, B., at p. 361; Jones v. Gordon (1877), 2 App. Cas. 616.

The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9, extends the Factors Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 39), s. 4 (now repealed), which applied only to a buyer in possession of a document of title, and did not require a delivery or transfer by him, and was enacted to do away with the effect of the decision in Jenkyns v. Osborne (1844), 7 Man. & G. 678, that a buyer was not an "agent entrusted" with goods or a document of title; see Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. 318, C. A. Accordingly such a consent is valid, notwithstanding that it is induced by fraud (k), provided the fraud be not such as to nullify the consent (l), or is given subject to the fulfilment by the buyer of some condition subsequent, and such condition is not fulfilled (m).

T. 786; Strohmenger v. Attenborough (1894), 11 T. L. R. 7 (pledge by woman living with buyer, and having actual authority); Kitto v. Bilbie, Hobson & Co. (1895), 72 L. T. 266 (no delivery, and no intention to dispose); Capital and Counties Bank, Ltd. v. Warriner (1896), 12 T. L. R. 216 (pledge by buyer of warehouseman's warrant for unsevered bulk); Robinson v. Restell (1896), 12 T. L. R. 174 (possession not with seller's consent); Inglis v. Robertson, [1898] A. C. 616 (document of title obtained without privity of seller). It seems that an assignment for the benefit of creditors is not a "disposition" (Kitto v. Bilbie, Hobson & Co., supra); see also title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 225.

(i) Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A. But, as the buyer has only to "obtain" possession of the goods or the documents of title to the goods with the seller's consent (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9), any subsequent revocation of the consent is immaterial (Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., supra, per COLLINS, L.J., at p. 658), unless, of course, the buyer's disponent is aware of this, as such knowledge would negative his good faith; and see title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 205, 206. With regard to the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2 (4), the elaborate discussion which the question of consent underwent in Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., supra, seems to show that the fact of the seller's consent must be proved affirmatively by the buyer's disponent. Quære, also, whether the reference in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2 (4), to "the owner" does not show that that clause refers to dispositions by mercantile agents under ibid., s. 2 (1), only.

(n) I.e., under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9, the buyer being in the position of a mercantile agent, the pledge of the documents of title is deemed to be a pledge of the goods (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 3; Inglis v. Robertson, [1898] A. C. 616). As to pledges by mercantile agents or factors, see title PAWNS AND PLEDGES, Vol. XXII., pp. 239, 240.

(o) The definitions of "pledge" (see note (b), p. 201, ante) and of "consideration" (see note (b), p. 201, ante) authorise the pledge for an antecedent debt, or in exchange.

(p) This proposition is based upon the assumption that the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 4, is incorporated with ibid., s. 9, that is to say, that the buyer under ibid., s. 9, is a "mercantile agent" under ibid., s. 4. For the provisions of ibid., s. 4, see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 206. There is no judicial decision on the point, but the whole tendency of the cases is to treat a buyer, who has satisfied the requirements of the

Where such a person pledges the goods in consideration of the delivery or transfer of other goods, or of a document of title (q), or of a negotiable security, the pledgee acquires no right or interest in the goods so pledged in excess of the value of the goods, documents, or security when so delivered or transferred in exchange (r).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Effect on Title of Writs of Execution.

352. A writ of fiery facias or other writ of execution against goods binds the property in the goods of the execution debtor as from the time when the writ is delivered to the sheriff (s) to be executed; and, for the better manifestation of such time, it is the duty of the sheriff, without fee, upon the receipt of any such writ, to indorse upon the back thereof the hour, day, month, and year when he received the same (t).

No such writ prejudices the title to such goods acquired by any person in good faith and for valuable consideration, unless such person had, at the time when he acquired his title, notice that such writ, or any other writ by virtue of which the goods of the execution debtor might be seized or attached, had been delivered to, and remained unexecuted in the hands of, the sheriff (t).

Part IV.—Performance of the Contract.

SECT. 1.—General Duties of Seller and Buyer.

353. It is the duty (u) of the seller to deliver (a) the goods (b) General rule.

Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 55), s. 9, as a mercantile agent within the other provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45); for the effect of ibid., ss. 4, 9, and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47, see note (o), p. 260, post.

(q) See note (n), p. 202, ante.

(r) Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 5, relating to exchanges by "mercantile agents" by way of pledge. This proposition is based upon the assumption that ibid., s. 5 and s. 9, are to be read together.

(s) "Sheriff" includes, for this purpose, any officer charged with the enforcement of a writ of execution (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 26 (2)). It therefore includes bailiffs of county courts, sequestrators under a sequestrari facias, and the bishop under a feri facias, or sequestrari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis. As to the various forms of execution generally, see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 37 et seq.; and as to sheriffs and bailiffs generally, see title SHERIFFS AND BAILIFFS, pp. 791 et seq., post.

(t) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 26 (1); see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 42, 81. For the meaning of "hour," "day," "month," and "year," see title TIME.

(u) The duty is enforceable by action, like all duties declared by the Act (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 57); p. 280, post; see also Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (1) (action for non-acceptance), s. 51 (1) (action for non-delivery); pp. 267, 269, post. The duty will not, of course, arise unless the contract is enforceable under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4; see p. 127, ante.

(a) Delivery is voluntary transfer of possession (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1)); see p. 119, ante.

(b) I.e., the goods contracted for. Thus, if they are existing goods, similar goods afterwards acquired cannot be delivered (Thomson Brothers v. Thomson (1885), 13 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 88), and the goods must conform to and of the buyer to accept (c) and pay (d) for them in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale (e).

354. Unless otherwise agreed (f), delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions (g), that is to say, the the contract in description (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 13; see p. 154, ante), and quality or fitness (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 14, 15; see pp. 157 et seq., ante); they must be in a deliverable state (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 5 (1); see p. 168, ante), and be of the proper quantity and not mixed with other goods (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30; see p. 212, post); and the seller must have the right to sell them (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 12 (1), 21 (1); see pp. 153, 192, ante). As to when the seller is by law excused from delivering specific goods, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 7; p. 146, ante. For the specific performance of a contract to deliver ascertained goods, see p. 272, post.

(c) Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 35 (see p. 230, post); not under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4 (see p. 127, ante). Acceptance under the latter provision goes to the formation of the contract only, and not to its performance.

(d) As to the fixing of the price, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 8, 9; pp. 147, 148, ante. The liability to pay prima facie arises only when the property has passed (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 1, 49; Laird v. Pim (1841), 7 M. & W. 474, per PARKE, B., at p. 478); but by agreement it may be payable independently of that fact or of delivery (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2)); see p. 267, post. The price is payable, even after the destruction of the goods, the property in which has not passed, if the buyer took the risk (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20; see p. 188, ante, p. 235, post). An agreed price includes materials incorporated, but not contracted for (Wilmot v. Smith (1828), 3 C. & P. 455). As to the buyer's liability to pay the price to a third person by agreement, see Kleinwort, Sons & Co. v. Reddaway & Co. (1904), 9 Com. Cas. 292, C. A.; and, as to payment by the proceeds of a resale to be made by the seller's agent, see Hoffman v. Heyman (1822), 2 Dow. & Ry. (κ. B.) 74.

(e) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 27. For specific rules as to delivery and acceptance, see pp. 206 et seq.; 228 et seq., post. The parties may make what bargain they please. Thus, they may agree that delivery shall be made to a carrier (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32; see pp. 222 et seq., post), or at the destination of the goods (Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Mattos (1862), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 328), or they may agree that delivery to a carrier shall be sufficient, yet that the price, in whole or in part, shall not be payable unless the goods arrive at their destination (ibid.). Again, the contract may be conditional (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 1 (2); see p. 113, ante); thus, e.g., delivery may be made conditional on the buyer's request (Bowdell v. Parsons (1808), 10 East, 359). Where the mode of delivery is not stated in the contract, it may be shown by trade usage (Robinson v. United States (1871), 13 Wallace, 363). As to trade usage generally, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 549 et seq.

(f) Thus, the buyer may agree to pay the price at a date fixed, which will or may arrive before the time for delivery, in which case Rule 1 in Pordage v. Cole (1669), 1 Wms. Saund., ed. 1871, p. 551, applies, and delivery will not be a condition precedent to payment (Smith v. Woodhouse (1806), 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 233, Ex. Ch.; Dicker v. Jackson (1848), 6 C. B. 103); or the seller may agree to deliver similarly irrespectively of payment, i.e., to sell on credit, in which case, under the same rule, payment is not a condition precedent to delivery (Staunton v. Wood (1851), 16 Q. B. 638). Usage may, however, make a future payment contemporaneous with delivery (Field v. Lelean (1861), 6 H. & N. 617, Ex. Ch.); but compare Spartali v. Benecke (1850), 10 C. B. 212). An agreement to sell on credit may be inferred from the very circumstances of the case, as, e.g., where a man dines at a restaurant (R. v. Jones, [1898] 1 Q. B. 119, C. C. R.).

(g) Because delivery and payment are to be made at the same time, and seller must be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in exchange (h) for the price, and the buyer must be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for the possession of the goods (i). Similarly delivery of the goods and acceptance thereof are concurrent conditions (k).

Where the goods are deliverable by instalments the same concurrent conditions primâ facie exist with regard to each instalment (l).

The readiness and willingness of one party to deliver or accept the goods may itself be dependent on a condition precedent to be performed by the other party (m).

Notwithstanding that, by the terms of the contract, there is a provision for credit, that provision is excluded if subsequently the buyer becomes insolvent (n). Insolvency of buyer.

so neither is a condition precedent to the other. All that is necessary is that the parties concur in the joint act (Rule 5 in Pordage v. Cole (1669), 1 Wms. Saund., ed. 1871, p. 551; Rawson v. Johnson (1801), 1 East, 203, per LE BLANC, J., at p. 212); whereas, in the case of a condition precedent, performance or tender, as equivalent to performance, must be proved (Pickford v. Grand Junction Rail. Co. (1841), 8 M. & W. 372, per PARKE, B.). The words "ready and willing" imply not only the disposition, but the capacity to do the act (De Medina v. Norman (1842), 9 M. & W. 820, per LORD ABINGER, C.B., at p. 827; Lawrence v. Knowles (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 399; Measures Brothers, Ltd. v. Measures, [1910] 2 Ch. 248, C. A.).

(h) Not necessarily exchange then and there, but exchange in a business sense (Ryan v. Ridley & Co. (1902), 8 Com. Cas. 105). Where the price is payable in exchange for shipping documents, either expressly, or by the effect of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28, the seller performs his contract by tendering the documents, although the goods may be then incapable of inspection and acceptance (Polenghi Brothers v. Dried Milk Co., Ltd. (1904), 92 L. T. 64; E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18).

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28; Rawson v. Johnson, supra (no tender by buyer necessary); followed in Waterhouse v. Skinner (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 447; *Wilks v. (Ex.) 130 (resale by seller not inconsistent with readiness and willingness where goods unascertained); Forrest & Son, Ltd. v. Aramayo (1900), 83 L. T. 335, C. A. The fraudulent taking by the buyer from the seller's premises of other goods in lieu of the goods contracted for does not amount to a rescission of the contract or prevent the buyer from showing he is ready and willing to accept and pay for the goods contracted for (Lewis v. Clifton (1854), 14 C. B. 245). See also on this subject, Greaves v. Ashlin (1813), 3 Camp. 426, and Ford v. Yates (1841), 2 Man. & G. 549, explained in Lockett v. Nicklin (1848), 2 Exch. 93.

Delivery.

What operates as
delivery.

SECT. 2.—*Delivery.*SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

355. Delivery (o) of the goods may be made by the seller doing any act or thing whereby the goods are put into the custody or under the control of the buyer or his agent in that behalf (p), or whereby the buyer or his agent is enabled to obtain such custody or control (q).

Delivery may also be made by means of any act or thing which the parties agree shall be treated as a delivery (r).

Where the goods are at the time of the contract of sale in the possession of the buyer or his agent, the completion of the sale operates primâ facie as a delivery of the goods (s).

in each case on the contract, express or implied, between the parties (a). Apart from any such contract, express or implied, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business, if he have one, and if not, his residence (b). If, however, the contract is for specific goods, which, to the knowledge of the parties when the contract is made, are in some other place, then that place is the place of delivery (c).

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

357. Where by the terms of the contract the goods are to be taken by the buyer from the seller's land or premises, the contract of sale (d) by implication confers on the buyer a licence by the seller to the buyer to enter upon the land or premises to remove the goods (e). Such licence is irrevocable, at any rate as regards any part of the goods, the property in which has passed to the buyer (f).

Delivery on
or premises.

(a) The rule assumed and stated by text-writers previously to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), was that prima facie it is the duty of the buyer to take the goods, and that the seller's duty is fulfilled by his putting the goods at the disposal of the buyer at the place of delivery; see Wood v. Tassell (1844), 6 Q. B. 234; Smith v. Chance (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 753, per HOLROYD, J., at p. 755; Wilkinson v. Lloyd (1845), 7 Q. B. 27, 44. There seems to be nothing in the wording of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), to displace this rule.

(b) This provision adopts a rule previously assumed as being the common law (Benjamin, Contract of Sale, 2nd ed., p. 684; 5th ed., p. 682). By the French Civil Code, art. 1609, the place of delivery, in the absence of intention, is the place where the goods are at the time of sale; see also Pothier, Contrat de Vente, 52. So also by the Indian Contract Act, 1872 (No. IX. of 1872), s. 94 (which was intended to embody English law), the place of delivery is, in the case of a sale or agreement to sell, the place of the situation of the goods at the time of such sale or agreement, or, if the goods are not then in existence, at the place of their production; see also on this subject, Hatch v. Oil Co. (1879), 100 United States Reports [10 Otto], 124.

(c) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (1).

(d) Even where ibid., s. 4, is not satisfied, the licence to enter is valid until revoked (Carrington v. Roots (1837), 2 M. & W. 248, per curiam (decided under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4)).

(e) Liford's Case (1614), 11 Co. Rep. 46 b, 52 a; Plowd. 16 a; Jones (James) & Sons, Ltd. v. Tankerville (Earl), [1909] 2 Ch. 440, per PARKER, J., at p. 442. A licence to enter land does not confer an interest in land under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4 (McManus v. Cooke (1887), 35 Ch. D. 681, per KAY, J., at p. 688; Warr (Frank) & Co., Ltd. v. London County Council, [1904] 1 K. B. 713, C. A.); and see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 338, 339.

(f) Thomas v. Sorrell (1673), Vaugh. 330, Ex. Ch., per VAUGHAN, C.J., at p. 351; Wood v. Manley (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 34. Whether a licence is ab initio irrevocable as regards goods which have not become the buyer's property seems to be doubtful: in Jones (James) & Sons, Ltd. v. Tankerville (Earl), supra, PARKER, J., in a considered dictum, suggests on the authorities that the mere fact of a contract of sale for standing timber or growing hay to be cut by the buyer may confer such an interest at law on the buyer that a licence to cut is ab initio irrevocable. Marshall v. Green (1875), 1 C. P. D. 35, undoubtedly involves a decision to that effect, but the point about the irrevocableness of the licence does not seem to have been argued; and in Web v. Paternoster (1619), Palm. 71, the buyer had cut and stacked the hay on the seller's land, thereby becoming the owner of the hay (Wallis v. Harrison (1838), 4 M. & W. 538, per PARKE, B., at p. 544). In America the licence is treated as divisible, and thus revocable so far as it has not been acted on (Giles v. Simonds (1860), 81 Massachusetts Reports, 441; Drake v. Wells (1865), 93 Massachusetts Reports, 141; Fletcher v. Livingston (1891), 153 Massachusetts Reports,

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

Place of
uncertain.

358. Where the place of delivery is not indicated by the contract, and is within the option of the seller or of the buyer respectively, it is a condition precedent to the liability of the buyer or of the seller respectively to accept or to deliver the goods that he should receive notice of the place of delivery (g).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Time of Delivery.

General rule
as to time.

359. Where under the contract of sale the seller is bound to send the goods to the buyer, but no time for sending them is fixed (h), the seller is bound to send them within a reasonable time (i). Similarly, where the seller is not bound to send the goods, but the buyer is to take possession of them from the seller or a third person, the seller is deemed to promise that the buyer, if he applies for the goods within a reasonable time, shall receive them (k).

388). The point is, however, of little practical importance, as a buyer sued for trespass could counterclaim for a breach of contract by the revocation of the licence (Smart v. Jones (1864), 15 C. B. (N. S.) 717; Kerrison v. Smith, [1897] 2 Q. B. 445).

(g) Davies v. McLean (1873), 21 W. R. 264 (goods sold "ex quay or warehouse": seller's option); Armitage v. Insole (1850), 14 Q. B. 728: followed in Sutherland v. Allhusen (1866), 14 L. T. 666 (goods deliverable "f.o.b." at a specified port: buyer's duty to name ship); compare Hobson v. Riordan (1886), 20 L. R. Ir. 255; Great Northern Rail. Co. v. Harrison (1852), 12 C. B. 576, Ex. Ch. (goods deliverable as required); Forrest & Son, Ltd. v. Aramayo (1900), 83 L. T. 335, C. A. (delivery f.o.b.: buyer's option); Wackerbarth v. Masson (1812), 3 Camp. 270 (goods "f.o.b. a foreign ship"); Sharp v. Christmas (1892), 8 T. L. R. 687, C. A. (boat to be sent within certain time: no notice by buyer); see also Knox v. Mayne (1873), 7 I. R. C. L. 557 (buyer entitled to name port of discharge).

(h) The question of the agreed time of delivery is one of construction. Various rules have been laid down; see title TIME.

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (2); Ellis v. Thompson (1838), 3 M. & W. 445. Reasonable time is a question of fact (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 56; see p. 280, post). The circumstances surrounding the contract must be considered (Ellis v. Thompson, supra), and also facts subsequently causing delay without the seller's fault (Hick v. Raymond and Reid, [1893] A. C. 22, per Lord Watson, at p. 33; Re Carver & Co. and Sassoon & Co. (1911), 17 Com. Cas. 59 (stranding and refloating of ship causing delay)). The rule stated in the text may be changed by express agreement, or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by usage, if the usage is such as to bind both parties to the contract (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; see p. 279, post), as e.g., where the time of delivery is made indefinite, and is within the option of the buyer (Jones v. Gibbons (1853), 8 Exch. 920); see the text, infra; and the same principle no doubt applies where the option is the seller's. Again, the rule of reasonable time only applies where the making delivery, or the taking of possession, depends for its performance entirely on the party bound thereto. If delivery is to be made by means of some act in which both are to concur, and to which each binds himself, the only liability imposed is that each shall use reasonable diligence to perform his part in the joint act (Ford v. Cotesworth (1868), L. R. 4 Q. B. 127, 133). The rule laid down by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (2), is subject to the principle declared in Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co. (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 125, Ex. Ch. (see p. 116, ante), so that excessive delay, though not caused by the seller, may frustrate the buyer's adventure and entitle him to refuse acceptance (Re Carver & Co. and Sassoon & Co., supra).

(k) Buddle v. Green (1857), 27 L. J. (EX.) 33.

Due performance by the seller of his duty in that behalf is a condition precedent to the buyer's liability to accept and pay for the goods (l).

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

360. Demand or tender of delivery may be treated as ineffectual unless made at a reasonable hour. What is a reasonable hour is a question of fact (m). Hour of demand or tender.

361. Where the time of delivery is indefinite, and within the option of the buyer (n), as, for example, where the goods are deliverable "on request," or "as required" (o), or on similar terms, the seller is not bound to deliver the goods until the buyer calls for delivery. If he calls for delivery, the seller must deliver within a reasonable time thereafter (p). Seller's or buyer's option.

If the buyer does not call for delivery within a reasonable time after the contract, the seller may give him notice to do so (q). If the buyer fails to call for delivery within a reasonable time after the notice, the seller may repudiate the contract, if it be an entire one (r).

Similar principles, mutatis mutandis, apply to the buyer's liability

(l) Ellis v. Thompson (1838), 3 M. & W. 445; Macdonald v. Longbottom (1859), 1 F. & F. 538.

(m) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (4). Previously to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), the reasonableness of the hour was a question of law, and elaborate rules for determining it were laid down in Startup v. Macdonald (1843), 6 Man. & G. 593, Ex. Ch.

(n) As to notice of a purely collateral event on which delivery depends, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 434.

(o) The buyer must of course have agreed to buy. The rule in the text does not apply if "as required" means "if required" (Moon v. Camberwell Borough Council (1903), 89 L. T. 595, C. A.).

(p) Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 381; Birks v. Trippet (1666), 1 Wms. Saund. 32, 33 b; Bowdell v. Parsons (1808), 10 East, 359; Great Northern Rail. Co. v. Harrison (1852), 12 C. B. 576, Ex. Ch.; see also Honck v. Muller (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 92, C. A. (alternative times). The seller dispenses with a request if he wrongfully resells the goods (Bowdell v. Parsons, supra), or declares his inability to deliver (Leeson v. North British Oil and Candle Co. (1874), 8 I. R. C. L. 309).

(q) Primâ facie, the buyer has the whole of his life to call for delivery (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 378; Llanelly Rail. and Dock Co. v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 550). The rule as to reasonable time is excluded; consequently the seller is not discharged because the buyer does not call for delivery within a reasonable time after the contract (Jones v. Gibbons (1853), 8 Exch. 920). But the buyer's liability may be hastened by notice (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 378; Jones v. Gibbons, supra).

(r) Jones v. Gibbons, supra. Where, however, the property has passed, the seller may, at his option, keep the goods, and charge the buyer the expenses of their custody (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37); see p. 232, post. Where the goods are deliverable by instalments to be separately paid for, the contract is divisible, and a partial breach by the buyer does not necessarily entitle the seller to repudiate (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2); Eastern Counties Rail. Co. v. Philipson (1855), 16 C. B. 2); see p. 220, post. It is otherwise where the price is not apportioned, for in such a case the consideration for delivery is indivisible, and a partial breach is a total breach, and the seller may repudiate (Chanter v. Leese (1839), 5 M. & W. 698, Ex. Ch.; Kingdom v. Cox (1848), 5 C. B. 522).

SECT. 2. to accept the goods where the time of delivery is indefinite and Delivery. within the option of the seller (s).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Goods in Possession of Third Person.

Third person must attorn.

362. Where the goods at the time of the sale (t) are in the possession of a third person, there is no delivery by the seller to the buyer unless and until the third person acknowledges (a) to the buyer that he holds the goods on his behalf (b); but this provision does not affect the operation of the issue or transfer of any document of title (c) to goods (d).

An acknowledgment by the third person of the buyer's title to the goods must be given with the consent of both seller and buyer (e).

If the person in possession of the goods wrongfully refuses to acknowledge the buyer's title, the buyer may repudiate the contract (f).

parties with regard to acknowledg-
ment.

The seller and the buyer must, each of them, so far as it depends on him, do all that is necessary to enable the buyer to

(s) E.g., a contract for the sale of a waste product, deliverable when the seller has it to spare.

(t) I.e., at the time when the property passes. "Sale" by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1), includes a bargain and sale and sale and delivery. The latter part of the definition is here, from the nature of the case, excluded.

(a) In technical language, the third person must attorn to the buyer. An acknowledgment while the goods are unascertained is ineffectual, except as against the third person by way of estoppel (Busk v. Davis (1814), 2 M. & S. 397; compare Swanwick v. Sothorn (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 895 (goods ascertained); Hayman & Son v. M'Lintock, [1907] S. C. 936).

(b) Farina v. Home (1846), 16 M. & W. 119 (no attornment to warrant); Hammond v. Anderson (1803), 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 69 (buyer weighs all the goods and takes part); Lackington v. Atherton (1844), 7 Man. & G. 360 (delivery order: third person not seller's agent); Smith v. Chance (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 753 (conditional attornment by bailee: condition not performed by seller); Wood v. Tassell (1844), 6 Q. B. 234 (attornment and part delivery); Buddle v. Green (1857), 27 L. J. (EX.) 33 (refusal to attorn to delivery order); Poulton & Son v. Anglo-American Oil Co. (1911), 27 T. L. R. 216, C. A.; see also Salter v. Woollams (1841), 2 Man. & G. 650, where the third person attorned before the sale, and afterwards withdrew his consent.

(c) As defined in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (4); see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1), and pp. 119, 185, 193, ante, p. 225, post, where the effect of various documents is stated. The question under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (3), being one between seller and buyer, a bill of lading would seem to be the only document of title in point, that being the document which per se transfers possession. All other documents, such as warrants, delivery orders etc., require an attornment by the bailee; see Farina v. Home, supra; Lackington v. Atherton, supra; Buddle v. Green, supra; and Harman v. Anderson (1809), 2 Camp. 243; Bentall v. Burn (1824), 3 B. & C. 423 (delivery order); Haig v. Wallace (1831), 2 Hnd. & B. 671 (delivery order: goods in customs warehouse).

obtain the third person's acknowledgment of the buyer's title (g). If the acknowledgment is rightly withheld by reason of the buyer's default in that behalf, the seller, having done all that was incumbent on him, may treat the delivery as made (h).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Expenses in Connection with Delivery.

363. Unless otherwise agreed, the expenses of and incidental to putting the goods into a deliverable state (i) must be borne by the seller (k).

Of putting

364. Unless it is otherwise agreed, the expenses of and incidental to making delivery of the goods must be borne by the seller; the expenses of and incidental to receiving delivery, or incurred subsequently to delivery, must be borne by the buyer (l).

Of making or taking
delivery.

In particular, where goods are contracted for on the terms that they are to be shipped "free on board," the seller must defray the expenses of and up to shipment (m); and, where the price is to include the freight and the insurance, or, as it is said, on "c.f.i.," or "c.i.f.," terms, the seller, as between himself and the buyer, is chargeable with the amount of the freight and the insurance charges, and the buyer, if he has paid either of those charges, may take credit therefor (n).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Delivery of Wrong Quantity or of Mixed Goods.

365. Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods less than he contracted to sell, the buyer may reject them (o), but if the buyer accepts the goods so delivered he must (p) pay for them at the contract rate (q).

Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods larger than he contracted to sell, the buyer may (p) accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest, or he may (p) reject the whole. If the buyer accepts the whole of the the shipping documents fall on the buyer (Acme Wood Flooring Co. v. Sutherland Innes Co. (1904), 9 Com. Cas. 170, per BRUCE, J.).

(o) Because every contract for a quantity of goods is prima facie an entire contract for that quantity (Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 439; Baldey v. Parker (1823), 2 B. & C. 37; Bigg v. Whisking (1853), 14 C. B. 195). Conversely, the buyer cannot call for a portion of the goods without being ready and willing to accept all (Kingdom v. Cox (1848), 5 C. B. 522). Where the deficiency is so small as to be negligible the court applies the maxim de minimis non curat lex (Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A.; Harland and Wolff, Ltd. v. Burstall & Co. (1901), 17 T. L. R. 338, per BIGHAM, J.). The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1), must also be read subject to ibid., s. 31, under which the goods may be deliverable by instalments; see p. 215, post.

(p) Subject to any usage of trade, special agreement, or course of dealing between the parties (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (4)). Thus, by agreement, the quantity stated may be intended to be, not an absolute, but a maximum quantity, so that the buyer may be bound to accept less than the stated quantity (Graham v. Jackson (1811), 14 East, 498; Morgan v. Gath (1865), 3 H. & C. 748 (any unmerchantable goods to be rejected); Beckh v. Page (1859), 5 C. B. (n. s.) 708 (so many bales "or any less number that may arrive"); Arbuthnot v. Streckeisen (1866), 35 L. J. (c. p.) 305 (154 bales, if previous contract for 123 satisfied); Symes v. Hutley (1860), 2 L. T. 509 (order for such quantity up to 30 as are equal to sample); A.-G. v. Stewards & Co., Ltd. (1901), 18 T. L. R. 131, H. L. (so many tons, or such less quantity as may be required). Again, by usage of trade, a delivery order for "about" the quantity of goods sold from a warehouse may be good (Moore v. Campbell (1854), 10 Exch. 323). As to delivery by instalments, see pp. 215 et seq., post.

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1); Bragg v. Cole (1821), 6 Moore (c. p.), 114 (buyer to take goods: takes and retains part); Shipton v. Casson (1826), 5 B. & C. 378 (acceptance of less quantity); Richardson v. Dunn (1841), 2 Q. B. 218 (same: buyer's silence and delay); Gorrissen v. Perrin (1857), 2 C. B. T. 324 (470 out of 500 loads of timber). The buyer is liable, not for the price as such, but for the value of the goods (Shipton v. Casson, supra, at p. 383), and the contract rate is the best evidence of this. As to the liability of the principal to accept a less quantity where the seller is his agent, see Ireland v. Livingston (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 516, Ex. Ch.; (1872) L. R. 5 H. L. 395; Johnston v. Kershaw (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 82. The option given being to accept all the delivery, or to reject it, the buyer cannot claim to accept part only (Champion v. Short (1807), 1 Camp. 53; Aitken, Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Boullen and Gatenby, [1908] S. C. 490 (a case under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (2)). goods so delivered he must(r) pay for them at the contract rate(s).

Delivery.

Mixed goods.

Where the seller delivers to the buyer the goods he contracted to sell mixed(t) with goods of a different description(u) not included in the contract, the buyer may(r) accept the goods which are in accordance with the contract and reject the rest, or he may(r) reject the whole(a).

366. The quantity of goods contracted for is determined by the construction of the contract(b).

Particular rules as to quantity.

Such quantity(c) may be specified by reference to particular

(r) See note (p), p. 212, ante.

(s) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (2); Dixon v. Fletcher (1837), 3 M. & W. 146; Hart v. Mills (1846), 15 M. & W. 85 (new contract for part); Cunliffe v. Harrison (1851), 6 Exch. 903 (rejection); Rylands v. Kreitman (1865), 19 C. B. (N. S.) 351 (addition of unmerchable goods); Lomas & Co. v. Barff, Ltd., Frangopulo & Co. v. Lomas & Co. (1901), 17 T. L. R. 437; (1902) 18 T. L. R. 461, C. A. (latitude in quantity allowed, and exceeded); Cross v. Eglin (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 106 (same: "about 300 quarters, more or less"). The maxim de minimis non curat lex applies to excess delivery (Shipton, Anderson & Co. v. Weil Brothers & Co., [1912] 1 K. B. 574). The option being to accept the quantity contracted for, with a rejection of the excess, or to reject the whole delivery, the buyer cannot claim to accept only part of the contract quantity, or of the excess; but he can, under a new contract, accept the whole delivery, or part of it.

(t) The fact that the buyer has a right of selection shows that "mixed" is not confined to cases of inseparable admixture. It is also conceived that the addition of articles which may be regarded as put in as dunnage for secure packing is not a mixture (Levy v. Green (1859), 1 E. & E. 969, Ex. Ch., per WILLES, J., at p. 974).

(u) Inferiority in quality may not be a difference in description. Thus the inclusion in the delivery, to make up the contract quantity, of goods of the same kind, but of inferior quality, is not a mixture under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (3), and the buyer has no right of selection, though he may reject the whole delivery (Aitken, Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Boulton and Gatenby, [1908] S. C. 490).

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (3); Levy v. Green, supra (crookery); Shannon v. Barlow (1864), 15 I. C. L. R. 478 (books and stationery); Nicholson v. Bradfield Union (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 620 (coal of different kinds); Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Cowan (1874), 31 L. T. 336, Ex. Ch. (one bill of lading for contract and other goods: agreement to waive irregularity); Tarling v. O'Riordan (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 82, C. A. (clothing of wrong size); Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 948 (motor horns of wrong pattern). If the buyer, even inadvertently, consumes part of the mixed goods, he must pay the value of the part consumed (Nicholson v. Bradfield Union, supra). The option here is the same as under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (2), and, as under that clause, the buyer may accept, under a new implied contract, the whole of the delivery; see note (s), supra. It is doubtful whether the buyer has a right of selection under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (3), where goods of a different description go to make up the contract quantity, which is not exceeded. Where goods of the same description, but of inferior quality, are added to the contract quantity, the case seems to fall under ibid., s. 30 (2); see the text, supra.

(b) As to construction generally, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 509 et seq.; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 433 et seq.

circumstances or a particular standard (d). If, in such a case, a specified quantity is also mentioned, with the addition of qualifying words, such as "about," "more or less," or similar words, such quantity primâ facie (e) represents only an anticipative estimate of quantity, and is not a term of the contract (f); but such an estimate may specify a minimum quantity (g).

In other cases, the quantity of goods mentioned in the contract is material (h), subject, where qualifying words are used, to a reasonable latitude with regard to quantity (i), or where, by the terms of the contract, usage of trade, or otherwise, the qualifying words mean a definite latitude, to that latitude (j).

(d) As, e.g., an entire lot deposited in a particular warehouse, all the goods manufactured by the seller, or that may be shipped by the seller, or required by the buyer, etc.; see Tancred, Arrol & Co. v. Steel Co. of Scotland (1890), 15 App. Cas. 125 (buyer's requirements); Wood v. Copper Miners' Co. (1854), 14 C. B. 428 (supply for particular manufacture); Eastern Counties Rail. Co. v. Philipson (1855), 16 C. B. 2 (buyer's requirements). It is a matter of construction whether "required" means "requested" or "wanted" (Whitehouse v. Liverpool New Gas-Light and Coke Co. (1848), 5 C. B. 798 (requirements not confined to existing works); compare Von Mehren & Co. v. Edinburgh Roperie and Sail Cloth Co., Ltd. (1902), 4 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 232 (requirements so confined); see also the cases cited in note (f), infra. If the buyer renders the ascertainment by the standard impossible, the seller is discharged; see Pringle v. Taylor (1809), 2 Taunt. 150.

(e) But the contract may show that the quantity mentioned is material (Bourne v. Seymour (1855), 16 C. B. 337 ("500 tons, understood to be the full and complete cargo of the J. P.")).

367. A contract for the sale of a “cargo” is primâ facie a contract for the sale of the entire lading of the vessel on the particular voyage (k). A contract may be one for the sale of a cargo, whether or not the word “cargo” is mentioned in the contract (l).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Instalment Deliveries.

(i.) In General.

369. Unless otherwise agreed (n), the buyer of goods is neither bound to accept delivery thereof by instalments (o), nor entitled to demand the delivery of an instalment (p).

Ordinarily not allowable.

An agreement to accept delivery by instalments may, in the absence of an express agreement (q), be inferred from the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case (r); and in particular (k) Borrowman v. Drayton (1876), 2 Ex. D. 15, C. A. (“cargo of from 2,500 to 3,000 barrels”: non-acceptance); Kreuger v. Blanck (1870), L. R. 5 Exch. 179 (“small cargo, in all about 60 cubic fathoms”: 83 fathoms loaded); Sargent v. Reed (1745), 2 Stra. 1228 (cargo: whole loading); compare also Levi and Browse Island Guano Co. v. Berk & Co. (1886), 2 T. L. R. 898, C. A.; Covas v. Bingham (1853), 2 E. & B. 836. It was said in Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co. (1886), 12 App. Cas. 128, P. C., that “cargo” was a word susceptible of different meanings. But the question in that case was whether the property or risk passed in a portion of the lading while being shipped. It was not doubted that the buyer might ultimately have rejected part of a cargo. As to the passing of the property in a cargo, see p. 173, ante.

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (1). By ibid., s. 30 (1), the buyer is not bound to accept, in performance of the seller’s contract, less than the full quantity. By ibid., s. 31 (1), he is entitled to receive the goods in one delivery; see Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, C. A. (buyer not bound to accept 20 tons of pepper out of 25); Honck v. Muller (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 92, C. A., per BRAMWELL, L.J., at p. 99 (coat out of suit of clothes ordered); compare Brandt v. Lawrence (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 344, C. A. (shipment by “steamer or steamers”: buyer bound to accept instalment), as explained in Reuter v. Sala, supra; Liedemann v. Gray (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 219, Ex. Ch. (no objection by buyer on tender of an instalment).

(p) Kingdom v. Cox (1848), 5 C. B. 522; Reuter v. Sala, supra, per THESIGER, L.J., at p. 247; Honck v. Muller, supra, per BRAMWELL, L.J., at p. 99. The conduct of the buyer shows that he is not ready and willing to perform all his contract. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31, does not in terms apply to cases in which the amount of the instalments is or is not specified, but the same principle applies. Thus, if the goods are deliverable “as required,” and the buyer fails to require an instalment, the seller may or may not be entitled under ibid., s. 31 (2) (see p. 220, post), to repudiate the contract, according as the buyer’s breach is or is not a vital one (Eastern Counties Rail. Co. v. Philipson (1855), 16 C. B. 2).

Delivery.

from the delivery of part of the goods as an instalment, and acceptance thereof by the buyer without objection that complete delivery was not made (s).

(ii.) Particular Rules.

Qualifying words.

370. Where qualifying words, such as "about," "more or less," and similar words, are used, in a contract for a quantity of goods deliverable by stated instalments, it depends upon the construction of the contract whether the qualifying words apply to the whole quantity of goods, or to the amount of the instalments (t).

Position of buyer where price not apportioned to instalments.

371. Where the goods are deliverable by instalments, and the price of each instalment is not separately payable, although the price may be calculated with reference to separate portions of the goods, the buyer may reject any instalment delivered if the full quantity of the goods be not made up (a), but he must pay at the contract rate for such of the goods as he has dealt with as owner, or otherwise accepted (b). If he retains the goods delivered beyond the time appointed for complete delivery, or otherwise beyond a reasonable time for complete delivery, he must pay for them at the contract rate (c).

How far each delivery a separate contract.

372. For the purpose of delivery or acceptance each instalment is deemed to be the subject of a separate contract. Accordingly, the seller is bound to deliver, and the buyer to accept, each instalment duly demanded or tendered in the course of performance of the contract (d).

(t) Société Anonyme L'Industrielle Russo-Belge v. Scholefield (1902), 7 Com. Cas. 114, C. A. (held that the qualifying words applied only to the full quantity).

(a) Oxendale v. Wetherell (1829), 9 B. & C. 386, per PARKE, B.; approved in Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co. (1886), 12 App. Cas. 128, 138, P. C. Where the price is payable only after full delivery, or where no time of payment is specified, which amounts to the same thing, a full delivery by the seller is a condition precedent to the payment of any part of the price (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1); see p. 212, ante; and see the general principle stated in Chanter v. Leese (1839), 5 M. & W. 698, Ex. Ch.). The mere receipt by the buyer of an instalment is not a final acceptance of it (Hardman v. Bellhouse (1842), 9 M. & W. 596, per ALDERSON, B., at p. 600).

(b) Nicholson v. Bradfield Union, supra, at p. 625; see also Clarke v. Westrope (1856), 18 C. B. 765.

(c) Oxendale v. Wetherell, supra; compare Waddington v. Oliver (1805), 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 61 (no retainer by buyer).

(d) Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A., following Tarling v. O'Riordan, supra; Brandt v. Lawrence (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 344, C. A., as explained in Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, C. A.; Bratihuwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 543, C. A. Thus the fact of an acceptance of previous instalments does not

373. Notwithstanding that the instalments of the goods are to be separately paid for^(e), or that some of the instalments have been delivered, the buyer may, on the seller's default in the delivery of any instalment, and on returning any instalments previously received^(f), repudiate the contract ab initio, and recover any part of the price paid^(g), where the seller's breach constitutes a total failure of the consideration, as where the instalments of the goods are portions of a quantity which in its nature is an indivisible whole^(h), or a full delivery whereof is otherwise of the essence of the contract⁽ⁱ⁾.

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

When buyer may rescind contract ab initio.

374. Where the amount of the instalments is not specified in the contract, it is a question dependent upon its construction whether the instalments must be distributed rateably over the period appointed for the delivery of the whole quantity of the goods^(k).

Amount of instalments.

If rateable instalments are not contemplated by the contract, the amount of any instalment tendered or demanded must be reasonable, having regard to the time and circumstances of such tender or demand^(k), and in particular to the amount of the goods contracted for, and the period specified for complete delivery^(l).

375. Where the seller has the option of delivering the goods, either as a whole or by instalments, and elects to deliver them as a whole, and the goods are rejected by the buyer as not being in accordance with the contract, the seller's election is revocable, and he may subsequently, in the absence of a mutual intention to abandon the contract, in due time tender other goods, or an instalment thereof^(m).

Seller's election of single or instalment delivery.

preclude the rejection of subsequent ones (Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A.); and the fact that subsequent instalments are not delivered does not excuse the buyer for not having accepted previous ones (Brandt v. Lawrence (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 344, C. A.); but the buyer need not accept any instalment where it is apparent at the time of tender that the subsequent instalments would not be delivered (ibid., as explained in Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, C. A.).

^(e) Poussard v. Spiers (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 410, shows that the division of payment does not prevent a rescission ab initio where the partial breach goes to the root of the contract.

^(f) On general principles of law (Hunt v. Silk (1804), 5 East, 449; Clarke v. Dickson (1858), E. B. & E. 148).

^(g) The cases mentioned in the text, supra, are probably covered by the language of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2) ("treat the whole contract as repudiated"), these words being wide enough to apply to a rescission ab initio.

^(h) As, e.g., a book to be published in parts, or a machine deliverable in parts, or a suit of clothes; as to the last, see Honck v. Muller (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 92, C. A., per BRAMWELL, L.J., at p. 99.

⁽ⁱ⁾ There is no decided authority on this point, but it follows from principle; see Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 444. Notwithstanding the division of the price, delivery of all the goods would in some cases be the consideration for the buyer's promise to accept any of them; see the principle stated in Chanter v. Leese (1839), 5 M. & W. 698, Ex. Ch.

SECT. 2.

Delivery.

"Average" or "about equal" instalments.

376. Where goods are deliverable by "average" or "about equal" instalments with reference to specified times of delivery, or on similar terms, it is a question of fact whether, at any particular time, the contract quantities have, in a reasonable commercial sense, been delivered; or whether at such time there is any excess or deficiency, so as to constitute a breach of contract (n).

It is submitted that if there is an excess which has been accepted, such excess will be taken into account in the calculation of the quantities in connexion with subsequent deliveries.

Pro tanto discharge
by breach.

377. The contract, so far as it applies to any particular instalment of the goods, is discharged where default has been made in the delivery or acceptance of the instalment (o); or an event has happened which, by the terms of the contract, excuses delivery (p). Accordingly the seller cannot afterwards claim to deliver the instalment, nor can the buyer demand it.

The fact that the parties have silently omitted to enforce and to require the delivery of any instalment of the goods, or have by mutual consent forborne its delivery at the contract time, is relevant, but not conclusive, to show a mutual agreement to rescind the contract, so far as it applies to the instalment undelivered (a).

Q. B. D. 500, C. A.; Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, C. A.; see also Ashmore & Son v. Cox (C. S.) & Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 436, 440. In Reuter v. Sala, supra, the tender of the 20 tons as an instalment, after the rejection of the 25 tons, would, it seems, have been good if the tender had been in time; see, especially, Reuter v. Sala, supra, at pp. 245, 248; note (d), p. 216, ante.

(n) Barningham v. Smith (1874), 31 L. T. 540; Nederlandsche Cacao-fabrik v. Challen (David), Ltd. (1898), 14 T. L. R. 322. In Ireland & Son v. Merryton Coal Co. (1894), 21 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 989, the term "average or about equal monthly quantities" seems to have been treated as meaning in substance "about equal monthly quantities," as the buyer was held to be bound to buy in against the seller every month.

(o) Simpson v. Crippin (1872), 42 L. J. (Q. B.) 28, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 33; Barningham v. Smith, supra, per BRAMWELL, B., at p. 543; De Oleaga v. West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co. (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 472, 475; Nederlandsche Cacao-fabrik v. Challen (David), Ltd., supra, per BIGHAM, J., at p. 323. A fortiori, where each delivery is to be deemed a separate contract (Higgin v. Pumpherston Oil Co. (1893), 20 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 532, per the LORD PRESIDENT, at p. 535). The liability in damages of the party in default of course remains, as also the right of the other party to repudiate the contract, under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2), if the breach was a vital one. Tyers v. Rosedale and Ferryhill Iron Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 195, Ex. Ch., is not inconsistent with the proposition stated in the text: in that case the plaintiff was not in default.

(p) De Oleaga v. West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co., supra ("dangers or accidents of the mines"); Stephens, Mawson & Co. v. Great Western Colliery Co. (1899), 15 T. L. R. 432 (strike); Belgaard v. Green, Holland & Co. (1908), Times, 26th November ("hindrances interfering with production"). If the seller has the option of omitting delivery, wholly or partially, he may do so wholly, although he is able to make a partial delivery (ibid.). De Oleaga v. West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co., supra, shows the distinction between a provision which excuses, and one which merely entitles the seller to postpone, delivery.

(a) See and compare Higgin v. Pumpherston Oil Co., supra; Tyers v. Rosedale and Ferryhill Iron Co., supra.

378. When the delivery of an instalment of the goods is postponed subsequently to the contract, and no period of postponement is fixed by the parties, the instalment must be delivered within a reasonable time (b).

When postponement is made under a power in the contract exercisable during the existence of a specified state of affairs, the reasonable time runs from the state of affairs coming to an end (c). Where it is made on the request of one party assented to by the other, the time runs from the last request for postponement (d).

Where postponement is made on the coming into existence of a specified state of affairs, and a reasonable time for the delivery and acceptance of the undelivered residue of the goods elapses before the state of affairs has come to an end, the contract is wholly discharged as against both parties (e).

An assent to a request for postponement is revocable, unless it amounts to a new contract; accordingly, the party assenting may afterwards require the other party to deliver or accept the goods on the terms of the contract (f).

379. Payment of the price due for previous deliveries is not, in the absence of an agreement to that effect (g), a condition precedent to the liability of the seller to deliver subsequent instalments of the goods (h). But, if the buyer becomes insolvent, such a condition is thereupon implied by law (i).

A continued postponement is, however, some evidence of a mutual intention to rescind; see note (a), p. 218, ante; as to the facts to be considered in determining a reasonable time, see De Oleaga v. West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co., supra.

(d) Hickman v. Haynes, supra. It was decided in Plevins v. Downing (1876), 1 C. P. D. 220, that the request must, if the original contract be relied on, be made during the contract period by the party to be charged only; but compare Tyers v. Rosedale and Ferryhill Iron Co. (1873), L. R. 8 Exch. 305, per MARTIN, B., at p. 318; and see S. C. (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 195, Ex. Ch., per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 197.

(e) De Oleaga v. West Cumberland Iron and Steel Co., supra; King v. Parker, supra; Geipel v. Smith (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 404 (charterparty). To enforce the contract after excessive delay might have the effect of making it applicable to circumstances which the parties did not contemplate (Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co. (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 572). The parties must therefore be presumed to have intended from the first that an unreasonable delay should discharge them (Behn v. Burness (1863), 3 B. & S. 751, Ex. Ch., at p. 758).

But a positive refusal to pay for subsequent instalments would be a repudiation of the contract by the buyer under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2) (Withers v. Reynolds (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 882).

SECT. 2.

Delivery.

When either party may repudiate for partial breach.

(iii.) Repudiation for Partial Breach.

380. Where there is a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered by stated instalments, which are to be separately paid for, and the seller makes defective (k) deliveries in respect of one or more instalments, or the buyer neglects or refuses to take delivery of or pay for one or more instalments, it is a question in each case, depending on the terms of the contract (l) and the circumstances of the case, whether the breach of contract is a repudiation (m) of the whole contract, or whether it is a severable breach (n) giving rise to a claim for compensation, but not to a right in the other party to treat the whole contract (o) as repudiated (p).

see note (c), p. 242, and note (k), p. 263, post. Cash must be paid or tendered (ibid.; Re Nathan, Ex parte Stapleton (1879), 10 Ch. D. 586, C. A.).

(k) It is noticeable that no provision appears to be made for the case where the seller wholly omits to deliver an instalment, but the same principle applies.

(l) Where the question whether a breach is a vital one depends upon the construction of a contract in writing, it is one for the court (Emery (George D.) Co. v. Wells [1906], A. C. 515, P. C.).

(m) The breach may consist in an express refusal to perform the contract according to its terms; or in an implied refusal, to be inferred from the party's conduct (Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 648, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 657). "The test is whether the conduct of one party to the contract is really inconsistent with an intention to be bound any longer by the contract" (ibid., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 670). A failure to perform a vital part of the contract necessarily amounts to an implied repudiation (Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 443; quoted in Rhymney Rail. Co. v. Brecon and Merthyr Tydfil Rail. Co. (1900), 83 L. T. 111, 117, C. A.). A breach is vital where it renders the performance of the rest of the contract something substantially different from what the party not in fault contracted for (Bettini v. Gye (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 183, 188; Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co., supra, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 443).

(n) There is no necessary inference that a partial breach is a severable breach (Millar's Karri and Jarrah Co. (1902) v. Weddel, Turner & Co. (1909), 100 L. T. 128, per curiam), or that it is a vital one (Cornwall v. Henson, [1900] 2 Ch. 298, C. A., per COLLINS, L.J., at p. 304).

(o) It is not clear whether these words mean the whole contract ab initio, or only the unfulfilled part of the contract. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2), is based upon a series of cases in which the question was whether a partial breach by one party exonerated the other party from further performance; but the language of the provision seems to be wide enough to cover cases in which the partial breach by either party amounts to a total failure of the consideration moving from him.

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2); Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co., supra. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1), lays down the general rule that delivery by the seller of the full quantity is primâ facie a condition precedent to the buyer's duty to accept and pay for any of them. Conversely, as the duties of the parties are correlative (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28; see pp. 204, 205, ante), the seller is primâ facie not bound to deliver any unless the buyer is ready and willing to accept and pay for all (Kingdom v. Cox (1848), 5 C. B. 522). But this is so because the consideration is entire on both sides, and a partial breach is a total breach. Under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2), the consideration has been divided; consequently a breach as regards one or more instalments of the goods is not necessarily the breach of a condition precedent to the liability of the other party to accept or deliver the remainder. In such a case "each delivery is really like a delivery under

In particular, a breach in relation to one or more instalments of such a kind, or committed in such circumstances, as to lead to a reasonable inference that similar breaches will be committed in relation to subsequent instalments, justifies the party not in fault in treating the contract as repudiated by the party in fault, and he may himself repudiate the whole contract (q). The rule may apply even where there is a provision in the contract that each instalment of the goods shall be deemed to be the subject of a separate contract (r).

a separate contract, to be paid for separately, and in respect of the non-delivery of which the parties may well be assumed to have contemplated a payment in damages rather than a rescission of the whole contract" (Reuter v. Sala (1879), 4 C. P. D. 239, C. A., per THESIGER, L.J., at p. 246). The party therefore who commits a breach which is merely partial is allowed by law to aver that he is ready and willing to perform the rest of the contract, subject to compensating the other party for the partial breach. Illustrations of the principle enacted in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 31 (2), though not always within its terms, are Withers v. Reynolds (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 882 (price payable on each delivery: buyer insists on credit); Kent v. Godts (1855), 26 L. T. (o. s.) 88 (buyer's rejection of first instalment based on mistake); Hoare v. Rennie (1859), 5 H. & N. 19 (shipment by seller of defective quantity in first month); Jonassohn v. Young (1863), 4 B. & S. 296 (shipping inferior coal and detaining buyer's ship); Clarke v. Burn (1866), 14 L. T. 439 (payment for previous delivery not shown to be a condition); Simpson v. Crippin (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 14 (buyer takes quarter of first delivery); Freeth v. Burr (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 208 (refusal to pay for first instalment explained); Morgan v. Bain (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 15 (notice of buyer's insolvency, and no tender of cash); Leeson v. North British Oil and Candle Co. (1874), 8 I. R. C. L. 309 (goods as ordered from time to time: seller declares he cannot deliver balance); Bloomer v. Bernstein (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 588 (notice of buyer's insolvency and other facts); Corcoran v. Proser (1873), 22 W. R. 222, (buyer's claim to deduct value of short weight); Re Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co., Ex parte Carnforth Hæmatite Iron Co. (1876), 4 Ch. D. 108, C. A. (credit asked for, but no declaration of buyer's insolvency); Honck v. Muller (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 92, C. A. (buyer takes no coal in first month of three); Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 434 (hesitation on erroneous grounds of law to pay); Dickinson v. Fanshaw (1892), 8 T. L. R. 271, C. A. (non-acceptance of full quantity of some instalments by reason of trade depression); Booth v. Bowron (1892), 8 T. L. R. 641 ("cash on delivery": buyer takes credit); Mess v. Duffus & Co. (1901), 6 Com. Cas. 165 (mere declaration of insolvency no repudiation); Dominion Coal Co., Ltd. v. Dominion Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. and National Trust Co., Ltd., [1909] A. C. 293, P. C. (notice to seller that future deliveries not according to contract would not be accepted). The three cases of Hoare v. Rennie, supra; Simpson v. Crippin, supra; Honck v. Muller, supra, have given rise to much controversy. They present this common feature, that the breach of the contract was a breach at the outset. Perhaps Simpson v. Crippin, supra, may be distinguished from Hoare v. Rennie, supra; Honck v. Muller, supra, on the ground that, if the buyer had afterwards taken all the residue of the goods contracted for, his default in the first instalment would have amounted to no more than about 6 per cent. of the whole quantity, whereas in Hoare v. Rennie, supra, it would have been 21 per cent., and in Honck v. Muller, supra, 33 per cent., "not a trifle," per BRAMWELL, L.J., at p. 100.

R. 475 (goods sold "for shipment to France" by buyer: repudiation by seller on buyer's breach).

SECT. 2.

SUB-SECT. 8.—*Delivery to Carrier(s).Delivery.

Primâ facie a delivery
to buyer.

381. Where in pursuance of a contract of sale (t) the seller is authorised or required to send (a) the goods to the buyer, delivery of the goods to a carrier, whether named by the buyer or not, for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, is primâ facie (b) deemed to be a delivery (c) of the goods to the buyer (d).

Seller must follow buyer's instructions.

382. The seller must duly follow any instructions of the buyer as to the mode of transmission of the goods consistent with the terms of the contract. If he fails to do so, the goods are at his risk during the transit (e).

Seller's duty as to contract with carrier.

383. Unless otherwise authorised by the buyer, the seller must make such contract with the carrier on behalf of the buyer as may be reasonable, having regard to the nature of the goods and the other circumstances of the case. If the seller omits to do so, and the goods are lost or damaged in course of transit, the buyer may decline to treat the delivery to the carrier as a delivery to himself (f), or may hold the seller responsible in damages (g).

(t) Delivery of the goods to a carrier for transmission to a person on sale or return, approval etc., is not a delivery to the consignee, there being, at the time of delivery, no contract of sale (Swain v. Shepherd (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 223; Jacobs v. Harbach (1886), 2 T. L. R. 419 (time of return runs from actual receipt)).

(a) The seller not being necessarily bound to send the goods (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (1)); see pp. 206, 207, ante.

(b) The presumption is that the carrier is the buyer's agent to take delivery (Vale v. Bayle (1775), 1 Cowp. 294 (indicated mode of conveyance); Dawes v. Peck (1799), 8 Term Rep. 330; Dunlop v. Lambert (1839), 6 Cl. & Fin. 600, 620; Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1, per PARKE, B., at p. 7). This presumption applies even where the carrier wrongfully refuses to give the buyer actual possession on arrival (Groning v. Mendham (1816), 5 M. & S. 189). The presumption may be rebutted, as where the seller agrees to deliver the goods at their destination, or reserves the right of disposal under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 19 (1), (2); see p. 181, ante. In either of these cases the carrier is the agent of the seller, or, as the case may be, of the person indicated by the bill of lading, and not of the buyer (Gabarron v. Kreeft, Kreeft v. Thompson (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 274, per CLEASBY, B., at p. 285; Dunlop v. Lambert, supra, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 620).

(c) It is also primâ facie an appropriation of the goods passing the property (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 5 (2); see p. 170, ante), and an actual receipt by the buyer under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4; see p. 133, ante.

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (1). Delivery to a carrier discharges the seller from his duty to deliver, but he may, by agreement, take the risk of the goods' arrival; see notes to ibid., s. 20, p. 188, ante; and see ibid., s. 33, p. 223, post. As to acceptance under ibid., s. 4, where goods are delivered to a carrier, see p. 133, ante.

(e) Ullock v. Reddelein (1828), Dan. & Ll. 6 (goods sent by wrong route); compare Hills v. Lynch (1864), 26 New York Reports (Superior Court), 42; Wheelhouse v. Parr (1886), 141 Massachusetts Reports, 593. If the instructions are duly followed the risk is with the buyer (Vale v. Bayle, supra); see also Cooke v. Ludlow (1806), 2 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 119 (indicated ship full: goods by custom sent by next (in this case the buyer was negligent)).

(f) This has the effect of throwing the risk of the transit, in the case mentioned, on the seller.

(g) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (2); Clarke v.

384. Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are sent by the seller to the buyer by a route involving sea transit, in circumstances in which it is usual to insure, the seller must give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to insure them during their sea transit, and, if the seller fails to do so, the goods are deemed to be at his risk during such transit (h).

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

Insurance during sea transit.

SUB-SECT. 9.—Deterioration of Goods in Transit.

385. Where the seller of goods agrees to deliver them at his own risk (i) at a place other than that where they are when sold (j), the buyer must nevertheless, unless otherwise agreed, take any risk of deterioration in the goods necessarily incident to the course of transit (k). The seller must bear the risk of any extraordinary or unusual deterioration during transit (l).

Risk where seller agrees to deliver at destination.

Hutchins (1811), 14 East, 475 (omission by seller to insure special value of goods as required by the carrier); compare Cothay v. Tute (1811), 3 Camp. 129 (omission to insure: course of dealing); Buckman v. Levi (1813), 3 Camp. 414 (delivery to person not shown to be carrier's agent). The rule has been thus stated, that it is the seller's duty "to take the usual and ordinary precaution . . . to do whatever is necessary to secure the responsibility of the carriers for the safe delivery of the goods, and to put them into such a course of conveyance as that in case of a loss the defendant (buyer) might have his indemnity against the carriers" (Clarke v. Hutchins, supra, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 476); see also the Indian Contract Act, 1872 (Act No. IX. of 1872), s. 91. As the seller's duty under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (2), is only to act reasonably in the circumstances to provide against loss or damage in transit, it is conceived that he is under no liability to enter into such a contract with the carrier as insures an indemnity to the buyer in all events, as, e.g., against loss or damage by the act of God, or other perils excepted in the case of carriers. The buyer's alternative seems to be to treat the delivery as invalid, or as valid; in the latter case the seller being held responsible in an action of tort for negligence or conversion. As to insurance on sea transit, see the text, infra.

(h) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (3). This is a rule of Scottish law adopted by the Act (Bell on Sale, p. 89; Bell's Principles, Vol. I., s. 118; Brown's Sale of Goods Act, 1893, pp. 161—164). The rule is excluded by the terms of an f.o.b., "c.f.i.," or "ex ship" contract (Wimble v. Rosenberg, [1913] 1 K. B. 279). The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (3), like ibid., s. 32 (2), negatives in the particular case the ordinary presumption that risk attaches to the property; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20; see p. 188, ante. It is also noticeable that the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 32 (3), implies that, in some cases of sea transit, the seller is not bound to insure on behalf of the buyer, whereas under ibid., s. 32 (2), which is not in terms confined to land transit, the seller must make "a reasonable contract" with the carrier, a duty which, according to the common law cases, includes sometimes the duty to insure.

(i) Where the seller agrees to deliver the goods at their destination, the property ordinarily does not pass until delivery be made accordingly (see p. 174, ante); and the risk primâ facie attaches to the property. The seller may, of course, even where the property has passed (which is apparently the case contemplated here), take the risk (Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Mattos (1862), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 328). That risk is here qualified.

(j) The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 33, does not say "where they are at the time of the contract," so the rule in the text seems to apply only where the property has passed; see the definition of "sale," p. 117, ante.

(k) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 33; see Bull v. Robison

Delivery.

Risk where perishable goods are to be dispatched.

386. Notwithstanding that the seller may have agreed merely to dispatch the goods to the buyer by delivering them to a carrier or other agent for transmission on behalf of the buyer, nevertheless, where the goods are perishable, the seller is deemed to take the risk of the goods not arriving in the ordinary circumstances of transit(m), and of their not remaining for a reasonable time after arrival in a merchantable condition(n).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Buyer's Position with regard to Insurance by Seller.

Buyer not entitled to seller's insurance.

387. The mere fact that the buyer has bought, or agreed to buy, the goods does not entitle him to the benefit of any insurance thereof effected by, or available to, the seller at the time of the contract of sale. There must be a term, express or implied, in the contract that he shall have such benefit(o).

Whether any particular insurance has been contracted for and the extent to which insurance has been so contracted for are questions depending upon the construction of the contract(p).

(1854), 10 Exch. 342 (iron rusted by transit), where, it is conceived, the property did not pass until the arrival of the goods, so that the case may be strictly not an authority under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Viet. c. 71), s. 33.

(l) Bull v. Robison (1854), 10 Exch. 342; Walker v. Langdales Chemical Manure Co. (1873), 11 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 906 (carcase of whale becoming putrid by delay).

(m) Loss caused by any unusual or exceptional cause would fall on the owner of the goods, i.e., the buyer (Beer v. Walker (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 677). The risk of necessary deterioration would a fortiori fall upon the buyer; see p. 224, ante; Dickson v. Zizinia (1851), 10 C. B. 602 (Indian corn warranted merchantable on shipment).

(n) Beer v. Walker, supra. No more definite rule than that stated in the text can be gathered from this case, which was followed in Burrows v. Smith (1894), 10 T. L. R. 246 (partridges). In the latter case, however, the partridges must have been unmerchantable at the time of their dispatch. The rule is an illustration of the principle laid down in Caleutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Matos (1863), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 328, that the parties may make what bargain they please; and so may the law, to carry out their presumed intention. Quære whether in Beer v. Walker, supra, the rabbits were not unmerchantable on dispatch, in spite of the finding by the county court judge that they were then sound.

(o) Powles v. Innes (1843), 11 M. & W. 10; North of England Oil-cake Co. v. Archangel Insurance Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 249; Rayner v. Preston (1881), 18 Ch. D. 1, C. A., following Poole v. Adams (1864), 33 L. J. (CH.) 639; Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), ss. 15, 51. A common instance of such an agreement is a c.f.i. contract; as to this contract see, further, p. 227, post. Where there is no such agreement, an assignment of the policy after the loss is inoperative as against the insurer (North of England Oil-cake Co. v. Archangel Insurance Co., supra). Goods insured may, however, be sold, together with the policy of insurance, after a loss (Lloyd v. Fleming (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 299; Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 50 (1)); and see title INSURANCE, Vol. XVII., p. 361.

388. The buyer is, as between himself and the seller, entitled to the full benefit of the insurance on the goods effected by, or available to, the seller, notwithstanding that the moneys secured thereby may exceed the contract price, where he has contracted for the goods as being, or to be, so insured (q); and, even where he has not so contracted, he is entitled to all the moneys secured where the seller has in the performance of the contract unconditionally delivered the policy to the buyer, to whom the property in the goods and the insurable interest has passed (r).

Delivery.

Seller's insurance exceeding contract price.

389. Even where the buyer has contracted for the benefit of an insurance on the goods by the seller, he is not, unless it is specially agreed, entitled, as against the seller, to the benefit of any insurance supplementary to the contract, that is to say, effected by the seller for his own purposes independently of the contracts; and, if the buyer has in fact received from the insurer the moneys secured thereby, he must hold them for the seller (s).

SUB-SECT. 11.—Delivery by Bill of Lading and Other Documents.

390. The issue or transfer to the buyer of a bill of lading operates as a delivery to the buyer of the goods shipped (t).

By bill of lading.

391. Delivery orders (a), warrants (a), written engagements to deliver goods, and similar documents do not, like bills of lading, transfer possession. They are mere promises by the seller, being the issuer or transferor, to deliver, or authorities to the buyer to receive possession (b).

Effect of delivery orders, warrants etc.

Such documents, although they may purport to be, or may commonly be treated as, transferable, are not negotiable instruments (c),

A., where BOWEN, L.J., at p. 341, compares a bill of lading to the key of a warehouse; Green v. Sichel (1860), 7 C. B. (N. S.) 747 (waiver by buyer of custom to deliver by bill of lading); E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18. A bill of lading truly represents the goods. As to the time during which it operates, see Barber v. Meyerstein (1870), L. R. 4 H. L. 317. Generally, where goods are in the possession of a third person, an attornment to the buyer by the bailee is necessary; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (3) (see p. 210, ante); but that provision saves the operation of documents of title.

unless there be a trade usage to that effect (d). Accordingly, subject to the provisions of the Factors Act, 1889 (e), the owner cannot claim delivery of the goods except from the seller who is the issuer or immediate transferor of the document (f).

392. Goods deliverable by bill of lading (g) are delivered by the transfer to the buyer of a bill of lading duly indorsed and effectual to pass the property in the goods (h), representing goods which are in fact in accordance with the contract (i), and made out in terms which are not inconsistent with the provisions of the contract of sale (k), and are such that the buyer will be enabled to receive possession of the goods at the appointed destination (l).

Shipping documents.

393. Shipping documents, or other documents necessary to enable the buyer to deal with the goods in the usual way of business, which under the contract are deliverable to the buyer, must be such as are specified in the contract, otherwise such as are customary (m). They must be made out in proper form, and in terms not inconsistent with the provisions of the contract (m). A tender of some only of such documents, or of documents which are insufficient under the contract, or irregular, is an invalid tender (m).

to deliver to buyer's order). A fortiori, a document not purporting to be transferable is not negotiable (Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491 (certificate by wharfinger that goods ready for delivery)). The documents in question are in the same position as bills of lading before the Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111) (Thompson v. Dominy (1845), 14 M. & W. 403). "There is no decision or authority that it is competent to a party to create by his own act a transferable right of action on a contract, irrespective of custom" (Crouch v. Credit Foncier of England (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 374, 386). As to transfer of title by documents of title, see, further, p. 193, ante.

(d) Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 205 (iron warrants); Crouch v. Credit Foncier of England, supra, at p. 386. By the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 11, for the purposes of that Act, the transfer of a document may be by indorsement, or where the document is by custom or by its express terms transferable by delivery, or makes the goods deliverable to the bearer, then by delivery. As to trade usage generally, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 274 et seq.

(f) See the cases cited in note (c), p. 225, ante. Strictly speaking, the holder of the instrument claims delivery, not under the instrument itself, but under the contract in pursuance of which it was issued.

(g) But the buyer may waive the delivery of the bill of lading, and if the property and possession has passed to him, he is liable for the price (Green v. Sichel (1860), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 747 (trade usage to pay against bill of lading)).

SECT. 2.
Delivery.

394. Under a contract of sale of goods to be shipped on “cost, insurance, and freight” terms (o), the seller performs his contract by shipping under a proper contract of affreightment goods answering to the contract, insuring them, and forwarding to the buyer the invoice, bill of lading and other shipping documents, together with the policy of insurance (p).

Cas. 280 (customary documents: documents authorising deviation of ship); Yuill & Co. v. Robson, [1908] 1 K. B. 270, C. A. (c.i.f.; insurance against “all risks”: insufficient policy); compare Vincentelli & Co. v. Rowlett & Co. (1911), 105 L. T. 411 (“all risks”: construction of contract); Landauer & Co. v. Craven and Speeding Brothers, [1912] 2 K. B. 94 (bill of lading dated out of time, and it and policy of insurance not covering whole voyage); Orient Co., Ltd. v. Brekke and Howlid, [1913] 1 K. B. 531 (no insurance effected). As to shipping generally, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

In particular it is a question of fact whether a policy of insurance contemplated is one to cover the value of the goods to the buyer, or their value on shipment only (Tamvaco v. Lucas, supra (sale of cargo afloat)).

(o) I.e., “c.i.f.” or “c.f.i.”; see Ireland v. Livingston (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 395, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 406; Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co., [1911] 1 K. B. 214, per HAMILTON, J., at p. 220, where the contract is explained.

Cas. 170 (“c.i.f. to buyer’s wharf”: incidence of extra charges); Wancke v. Wingren (1889), 58 L. J. (Q. B.) 519 (breach abroad by non-shipment of goods to be shipped c.i.f.); Crozier, Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach, [1908] 2 K. B. 161, C. A. (“c.i.f. Tyne—Thames”: shipment of inferior goods), overruling Barrow v. Myers & Co. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 441; E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18 (hops to be shipped abroad, c.i.f. to London, terms “net cash”); Orient Co., Ltd. v. Brekke and Howlid, supra. The bill of lading or other contract of affreightment must be for the entire voyage to the port of destination, and the insurance must also cover the whole voyage, at any rate where there is a mercantile usage to that effect (Landauer & Co. v. Craven and Speeding Brothers, supra). As to the law where there is no usage, see ibid.; but compare Cox, McEuen & Co. v. Malcolm & Co., [1912] 2 K. B. 107, n. Under a c.i.f. contract, and whether the terms of payment are “cash” or “cash against documents,” the buyer must pay on tender of the documents, and is not entitled to previous inspection of the goods under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 34; see E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, supra. But his right of subsequent rejection, if existing, is not affected (Polenghi Brothers v. Dried Milk Co., Ltd. (1904), 10 Com. Cas. 42). The obligation of the seller to take out the insurance etc. does not suspend the delivery of the goods, and the passing of the property, until the arrival of the goods. These facts are to be determined as in other contracts (Delaurier & Co. v. Wyllie (1889), 17 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 167; Dupont v. British South Africa Co. (1901), 18 T. L. R. 24). the shipment of the goods, and without reference, unless it be otherwise agreed (q), to the arrival or landing of the goods (r). His duty in that behalf is a condition precedent to the liability of the buyer to accept and pay for the goods (r); but no condition is ordinarily implied that the bill of lading shall be delivered in time to enable the buyer to forward it to meet the arrival of the vessel, or for it to arrive at the port of discharge before landing charges are incurred; and an express stipulation to that effect is ordinarily not a condition precedent (s).

Declaration by seller of name of vessel etc.

396. The making to the buyer by the seller, pursuant to the contract, of a declaration of the particulars of the shipment, or the name of the vessel, or other facts in connection with the goods which the buyer requires to know to enable him to deal with them, is a condition precedent to the liability of the buyer to accept and pay for the goods (t).

SECT. 3.—Acceptance.

Buyer's right of examining the goods.

397. Where goods are delivered to the buyer which he has not previously examined he is not deemed to have accepted them unless and until he has had a reasonable opportunity of examining them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract (a).

Cas. 59 (name of ship then stranded, but afterwards refloated: no new voyage). A declaration by the seller to a broker as the common agent may by usage be a declaration to the buyer, even where the broker fails to communicate it to the buyer (Greaves v. Legg, supra).

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 34 (1), which applies only where delivery has been made, whereas ibid., s. 34 (2), applies where the delivery is incomplete. See Lorymer v. Smith (1822), 1 B. & C. 1; Howe v. Palmer (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 321; Heilbutt v. Hickson (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 438, per BRETT, J., at p. 456; Perkins v. Bell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 193, C. A. The buyer, if he requests an examination, must do so at a convenient time (Lorymer v. Smith, supra). The right of examination may be waived by express agreement, course of dealing, or usage (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55). In a contract on "c.i.f." terms, or where otherwise payment is to be made in exchange for shipping documents, an examination of the goods on or previously to the tender of the documents is waived (Polenghi Brothers v. Dried Milk Co., Ltd. (1904), 92 L. T. 64 (c.i.f. terms); E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18). As to when and where the right of examination arises, see p. 229, post. Examination may also be waived by the buyer, as where the goods are to be delivered at a particular place and there is no one there to examine them (Castle v. Swoorder (1860), 5 H. & N. 281, per BRAMWELL, B., at p. 288; (1861) 6 H. & N. 828, Ex. Ch., per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 837).

Unless otherwise agreed (b), when the seller tenders delivery of the goods to the buyer, he is bound to afford the buyer a reasonable opportunity (c) of examining the goods for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract (d).

SECT. 3.

Acceptance.

398. The time and place of delivery is prima facie the time and place for the examination of the goods by the buyer (e); but the circumstances of the case may indicate some other place and time (f), especially where the goods contain a latent defect not discoverable by ordinary diligence at the place of delivery (g). In the latter case an examination of the goods at the place of delivery is not binding upon the buyer, and he may, on a subsequent inspection, reject the goods if they are not in conformity with the contract (g).

Time and place of examination.

399. A tender by the seller not made according to the terms of the contract is revocable by him unless it has been accepted (h), and a valid tender may, within the contract time, or, if no time be specified, within a reasonable time, be substituted (i).

Tender by seller, when revocable.

As to the buyer's right to damages notwithstanding a waiver of examination, see Khan v. Duché (1905), 10 Com. Cas. 87. Where the buyer has examined the goods at the time of the contract under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (2) (see p. 159, ante), and the examination discloses a defect, the examination under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 34 (1), can only apply to other defects not so disclosed.

Biddell Brothers*, supra (cash against documents)), or where the original place of examination is changed by agreement (Heilbutt v. Hickson (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 438), or where the goods are delivered at a place where effective examination is impossible (Grimoldby v. Wells (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 391 (goods delivered to buyer's cart half-way to buyer's farm)), or where it would be unreasonable to require an examination (Molling & Co. v. Dean & Son (1901), 18 T. L. R. 217 (books sold and packed by seller for export by buyer)); compare Perkins v. Bell, supra (examination possible at place of delivery).

(h) The Court of Appeal in Borrowman v. Free (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 500, C. A., did not decide whether an invalid tender could be withdrawn after it had been accepted; but it is submitted that, being the offer of a new contract, it is irrevocable after acceptance.

(i) Borrowman v. Free, supra; Tetley v. Shand (1871), 25 L. T. 658; compare Guth v. Lees (1865), 3 H. & C. 558 (where the seller made a proper election which was assented to); see also Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Cowan (1875), 31 L. T. 336, Ex. Ch. (waiver of invalidity of tender of bill of lading); Ashmore & Son v. Cox (C. S.) & Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 436, 440.

SECT. 3.

Acceptance.

When acceptance takes place.

400. The buyer is deemed to have accepted (k) the goods when he intimates (l) to the seller that he has accepted them (m), or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller (n), or where, after the lapse of a reasonable time (o), he retains (p) the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them (q).

(k) The question whether the buyer has accepted the goods only arises where the buyer has a right to reject (Perkins v. Bell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 193, C. A.; Varley v. Whipp, [1900] 1 Q. B. 513). Thus, if the goods have been appropriated, and are in accordance with the contract, the property passes, and a rejection by the buyer is futile, as the goods are his own. But where the property has not passed, or where, even if it has passed, the buyer is entitled to take advantage of any condition subsequent, the question of acceptance, or of the right of rejection, as the case may be, arises (Varley v. Whipp, supra).

(l) Notice of acceptance under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 35, may be by words, spoken or written. Compare ibid., s. 4 (see p. 129, ante); Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, [1895] 2 Q. B. 97, C. A., per RIGBY, L.J.

(m) Saunders v. Topp (1849), 4 Exch. 390; compare Varley v. Whipp, supra (buyer's grumbling letter, followed later by return of goods: no acceptance).

(n) Parker v. Palmer (1821), 4 B. & Ald. 387 (resale); Parker v. Wallis (1855), 5 E. & B. 21 (spreading out seed); Chapman v. Morton (1843), 11 M. & W. 534 (notice of resale and resale by buyer); Hamor v. Groves (1855), 15 C. B. 667 (use and resale); Perkins v. Bell, supra (inspecting goods and sending on to sub-buyer); Molling & Co. v. Dean & Son (1901), 18 T. L. R. 217 (buyer sending on goods to final destination, when no acceptance); Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394 (seed with latent defect sown by sub-buyer); Mechan & Sons, Ltd. v. Bow, M'Lachlan & Co., Ltd. (1910), 47 Sc. L. R. 650 (tanks bought built into ship without inspection). A resale is only an acceptance where it takes place after an opportunity of rejecting, so as to amount to an election to accept the goods (Perkins v. Bell, supra; secus, where the buyer resells before such an opportunity (Morton v. Tibbett (1850), 15 Q. B. 428)), unless it is impossible to return the goods (Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, supra).

(o) Morrison and Mason, Ltd. v. Clarkson Brothers (1898), 25 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 427 (trial of pump: delay in rejection and payment of price). Reasonable time is a question of fact (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 56). The time may be provided for by the contract (Sharp v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1841), 9 M. & W. 7), or may be implied by trade usage (Sanders v. Jameson (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 557 (one day)). After what is primâ facie an unreasonable delay in rejection, the burden is on the buyer to show that it is reasonable, as, e.g., where he could not discover a breach of a condition before (Hyslop v. Shirlaw (1905), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 875, per Lord KYLLACHY, at p. 882 (genuineness of picture)).

(p) Bushel v. Wheeler (1844), 15 Q. B. 442 (silence and delay for five months); Norman v. Phillips (1845), 14 M. & W. 277 (refusal and six weeks' silence); Currie v. Anderson (1860), 2 E. & E. 592 (retention for a year of bill of lading) (all cases under the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 17); Milner v. Tucker (1823), 1 C. & P. 15 (chandelier: silence and six months' delay). The time for rejection, after the discovery of a breach of contract, is not extended because the goods were warranted for a period (Upton Manufacturing Co. v. Huiske (1886), 69 Iowa Reports, 557).

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 35, stating what amounts to an acceptance, whereas ibid., s. 34 (1), excludes the implication of an acceptance; see p. 228, ante. Where the contract is entire, an acceptance of part of the goods is an acceptance of all (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (1) (c); Champion v. Short (1807), 1 Camp. 53; see p. 151, ante); secus, where the contract is divisible, as where the goods are deliverable by instalments (Jackson v. Rotax Motor and Cycle Co., [1910] 2 K. B. 937, C. A.).

401. In determining what is a reasonable time for the rejection of the goods by the buyer, regard is had to the conduct of the seller, as where he has induced the buyer to prolong the trial of the goods, or has by his silence acquiesced in a further trial (r).

SECT. 3.
Acceptance.

Seller's conduct as affecting time for rejection.

402. Unless otherwise agreed (s), where goods are delivered to the buyer, and he refuses to accept them, having the right so to do, he is not bound to return them to the seller, but it is sufficient if he intimates to the seller that he refuses to accept them (t).

Return of rejected goods unnecessary.

403. The buyer must, after a rejection of the goods, act in relation thereto in a reasonable manner. Subject thereto, the goods, after a rejection thereof duly made, are at the risk of the seller (u).

Buyer's duty after rejection.

404. The right of rejection may be excluded by the terms of the contract or by usage of trade (a), except that no agreement will be construed, or trade usage be valid, to exclude a right of rejection of goods for their not conforming to their description under the contract (b).

Exclusion of right of rejection.

(t) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 36. The rule before the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), was stated to be that the buyer can reject the goods, either by giving prompt notice of rejection, or by doing any unequivocal act notifying his rejection; and that he is not bound to return the goods, or to place them in neutral custody (Grimoldby v. Wells (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 391, explaining the headnote in Couston v. Chapman (1872), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 250). The rule in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), is in substance the same; it does not profess to lay down an exhaustive rule.

(u) Okell v. Smith (1815), 1 Stark. 107, per BAYLEY, J., at p. 109. When it is said that the goods are at the risk of the seller, what is no doubt meant is that the buyer is not responsible for accidents not caused by his default. He is still a bailee, although an involuntary one, like a carrier after the refusal of the goods by the consignee (Heugh v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1870), L. R. 5 Exch. 51); see also Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 20; p. 188, ante. As to the duties of bailees generally, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 523 et seq.

A usage not to reject goods not excessively deficient in quality, or the deficiency in quality of which may be fairly compensated by an allowance, is reasonable and valid (Re Walkers, Winsor and Hamm and Shaw, Son & Co., supra, per CHANNELL, J., at p. 157).

Buyer's refusal to take delivery
after request.

405. When the seller is ready and willing to deliver the goods, and requests the buyer to take delivery (c), and the buyer does not within a reasonable time (d) after such request take delivery of the goods, he is liable (e) to the seller for any loss occasioned by his neglect or refusal to take delivery, and also for a reasonable charge for the care and custody of the goods (f).

The rights of the seller, where the neglect or refusal of the buyer to take delivery amounts to a repudiation of the contract, remain unaffected by this provision (g).

Rescission of buyer.

406. When the property in the goods has not passed (h) to an quality to be allowed for); Gorton v. Macintosh & Co., [1883] W. N. 103, C. A. (no allowance for "imperfections"); Re Green & Co. and Balfour, Williamson & Co. (1890), 63 L. T. 325, C. A. (arbitrator to decide quality only); Wallis, Son and Wells v. Pratt and Haynes, [1911] A. C. 394 (clause against "warranty" of description of seed); re-establishing Howcroft v. Laycock (1898), 14 T. L. R. 460 (a similar case); and, perhaps, not overruling Howcroft and Watkins v. Perkins (1900), 16 T. L. R. 217 (a similar case); Vigers Brothers v. Sanderson Brothers, [1901] 1 K. B. 608 (wood of certain lengths: clause against rejection). To allow a stipulation against rejection to apply to a case of nonconformity to description would render the contract nugatory (ibid., per BIGHAM, J., at p. 611); and therefore a trade usage to that effect cannot be incorporated in a written contract (Re North Western Rubber Co., Ltd. and Hüttenbach & Co., [1908] 2 K. B. 907, C. A.). A usage that goods, however deficient in quality, shall, if they answer their general description, be accepted, is also probably invalid (Sinidino, Ralli & Co. v. Kitchen & Co. (1883), Cab. & El. 217, per HAWKINS, J., at p. 220). The facts of the case may sometimes show that, although a name is given to goods, yet that they are not really sold under that description, as where the goods are sold for what they are (Carter v. Crick (1859), 4 H. & N. 412 (seed said to be "seed barley")). CHANNELL, J., having regard to a clause excluding a warranty, seems to have so interpreted the contract in Howcroft and Watkins v. Perkins, supra.

(c) Defined in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1), as "voluntary transfer of possession"; see p. 119, ante.

(d) Reasonableness is a question of fact (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 56); see p. 280, post.

(e) The liability is enforceable by action (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 57); see p. 280, post.

(f) The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37, adopting up to this point the ruling of Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Greaves v. Ashlin (1813), 3 Camp. 426, at p. 427; see also Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co. (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 338, per Lord CRANWORTH, at p. 344; Hartley v. Hitchcock (1816), 1 Stark. 408 (coachmaker's claim for standage).

(g) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37. The reference to the charge for custody seems to show that ibid., s. 37, applies only to cases in which the property has passed, and where the buyer neglects to take possession, i.e., where the goods are kept against the seller's will. The seller cannot charge for keep if he detains the goods against the buyer's will in exercise of a right of lien (Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., supra). The saving of the seller's rights on repudiation by the buyer causes difficulties of construction, as it implies that the buyer's neglect or refusal to take delivery within a reasonable time after request may not always be a repudiation, whereas it should be so, as being default extending to the utmost limits allowed by law (Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch. D. 89, C. A., per FRY, L.J., at p. 105; and see Jones v. Gibbons (1853), 8 Exch. 920; p. 209, ante). There are also difficulties in connection with the interpretation of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (3); see p. 264, post.

(h) Even where the property has passed the contract may be rescinded where no question arises under the bankruptcy law, or where no previously insolvent buyer, it is competent to him, with the consent of the seller, to reject the goods and rescind the contract, without the transaction being deemed to be a fraudulent preference (i) under the law of bankruptcy (k).

SECT. 4.—Payment.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

407. Unless it is otherwise agreed (l), the price of the goods is not payable unless and until the property therein has passed to the buyer (m), and also, where a delivery thereof is part of the consideration for, or a condition precedent to, payment, they have been delivered (n), unless delivery has been excused (o). But where the property in, and possession of, the goods is to pass to the buyer in contemporaneous exchange for the price thereof, the buyer is vested right of any third person against the buyer is involved (Richardson v. Goss (1802), 3 Bos. & P. 119 (wharfinger's general lien); Smith v. Field (1793), 5 Term Rep. 402; Bartram v. Farebrother (1828), 4 Bing. 579 (buyer's execution creditors); Heinekey v. Earle (1857), 8 E. & B. 410, Ex. Ch. (no rescission); Re Deveze, Ex parte Cote (1873), 9 Ch. App. 27, per MELLISH, L.J., at p. 34). As to the passing of property, see pp. 166 et seq., ante.

(i) Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48 (1), saved by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 61 (1); see p. 281, post.

Booker* (1848), 2 Exch. 691 (rule stated); Nicholson v. Bower (1858), 1 E. & E. 172; Re Deveze, Ex parte Cote, supra (reclamation of letter posted abroad); Booker & Co. v. Milne (1870), 9 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 314; secus, where property has passed (Barnes v. Freeland, supra; Neate v. Ball, supra; Re Fletcher, Ex parte Suffolk (1891), 9 Morr. 8). The intent to prefer can, however, be negatived (Bills v. Smith (1865), 6 B. & S. 314; Lauritzen v. Carr (1894), 72 L. T. 56 (buyer thinks goods were not his)); see, generally, title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 279 et seq.

(l) Thus the price may be made payable irrespective of delivery or the passing of the property (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2)). So, again, the buyer may take the risk of the loss of the goods although unappropriated to the contract (Stock v. Inglis (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 564, C. A.); and see p. 188, ante.

Where the price is not payable for separate portions of the goods (see Lockwood v. Tunbridge Wells Local Board (1884), Cab. & El. 289), the full amount of the goods must first be delivered, even where the goods are deliverable by instalments (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 30 (1); see p. 216, ante). As to instalment contracts, see pp. 215 et seq., ante. As to the liability for the price where the goods are retaken by the seller, see p. 265, post.

(o) As where the buyer refuses to take delivery (Hankey v. Smith (1799), Peake, 57 [42], n.); or it is otherwise prevented by his fault (Studdy v. Sanders (1826), 5 B. & C. 628); or he takes the risk of the goods being lost (Alexander v. Gardner (1835), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 671).

bound to be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for the possession of the goods (p).

408. Payment may, by agreement, be made by means of a bill of exchange, promissory note, or other negotiable instrument (q). Such a payment is prima facie (r) only conditional on the instrument being honoured at maturity (s), and operates during the currency thereof, and also so long thereafter as the instrument is outstanding in the hands of third persons, even after its dishonour (t).

(p) The condition concurrent under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28 (see p. 204, ante), is also a promise (Sanders v. Maclean (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 327, C. A.; Ryan v. Ridley & Co. (1902), 8 Com. Cas. 105 ("net cash in exchange for bill of lading etc."); E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers, [1912] A. C. 18). The seller must of course be ready and willing to deliver.

(q) Usage may show the time of giving the security (Whittaker v. Mason (1835), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 359).

(r) It may, by agreement, be taken as an absolute payment (Lewis v. Lyster (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 704; Sard v. Rhodes (1836), 1 M. & W. 153; Sibree v. Tripp (1846), 15 M. & W. 23). The question is one of fact (Goldshede v. Cottrell (1836), 2 M. & W. 20).

(s) I.e., the debt revives on the dishonour of the instrument; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (1) (b); pp. 239, 240, post. Accordingly the seller can sue on the original consideration, and without producing the bill, if it is in his or the buyer's possession at the time of action (Hadwen v. Mendizabel (1825), 10 Moore (C. P.), 477; Widders v. Gorton (1857), 1 C. B. (N. S.) 576; Re A Debtor, Ex parte The Debtor, [1908] 1 K. B. 344, C. A., semble overruling Burden v. Halton (1828), 4 Bing. 454). Where, however, the debt arises under a specialty the taking of a bill or note is not even conditional payment (Henderson v. Arthur, [1907] 1 K. B. 10, C. A., per FARWELL, L.J.; followed in Re Defries (J.) & Sons, Ltd., Eichholz v. Defries (J.) & Sons, Ltd., [1909] 2 Ch. 423, explaining Palmer v. Bramley, [1895] 2 Q. B. 405, C. A.).

(no debt during currency of bill); see Re A Debtor, Ex parte The Debtor, supra (bill outstanding), where the law is considered. The debt does not revive unless the instrument is in the seller's hands at the commencement of the action (Davis v. Reilly, [1898] 1 Q. B. 1 (bill in hand at trial)). If the instrument is duly paid, the payment dates back to the time of its receipt (Felix Hadley & Co. v. Hadley, [1898] 2 Ch. 680); see, further, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 447.

SECT. 4.
Payment.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Time and Mode of Payment.

411. Where no time or mode of payment is provided for by the contract (d), the course of dealing by the parties, whether under other contracts or under the contract in question (e), or the usage of trade (f), is relevant to show the intention of the parties as to the time or mode of payment.

Course of dealing or trade usage.

412. Where the mode of payment is to be arranged subsequently to the contract, and the buyer wrongfully refuses to enter into an agreement in that behalf within a reasonable time, the seller may recover, as an ordinary debt, the price of the goods, if it be then due (g).

Buyer's refusal to arrange mode of payment.

413. Where the price is payable at a time calculated with reference to the arrival of the goods, or their delivery to the buyer, or other event, and such event becomes impossible by reason of the perishing of the goods, or for some other reason, the buyer, if liable to pay the price (h), must pay it within a reasonable time after such event has become impossible (i).

(e) King v. Reedman (1883), 49 L. T. 473 (time of payment: course of dealing under same contract). In such cases the course of dealing negatives the implication of law under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28, that payment and delivery are concurrent; see p. 204, ante; and see also the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55. If, however, the contract is in writing, and no time is mentioned for delivery or payment, as by implication of law payment is to be concurrent with delivery, verbal evidence of a contrary course of dealing, or trade usage, is inadmissible (Greaves v. Ashlin (1813), 3 Camp. 426 (course of dealing); followed in Ford v. Yates (1841), 2 Man. & G. 549 (usage of trade)); compare *Lockett v. (i) Fragano v. Long (1825), 4 B. & C. 219, 223. The buyer is not liable to pay the price if, for example, the contract itself is dependent on a contingency, as if the goods were sold "to arrive," and they never arrived.

and a longer period of credit are specified with the addition of words of estimate, such as "from" or "about," it may be a question of fact whether, at any particular time between the two periods, the credit has not, in a commercial sense, expired (l).

415. Where payment is to be made by a bill of exchange or promissory note payable at a future day, and the bill is not given, then, unless credit is made conditional on such a bill or note being given (m), the buyer is nevertheless entitled to credit until the time when the bill or note would have matured (n). The seller's remedy in the meantime is an action for damages for breach of the agreement to give the bill or note (o).

In particular, credit is conditional where the price of the goods is payable in cash with an option to the buyer to substitute a bill or note payable at a future day; it is not conditional where the price is payable by such a bill or note with an option to the buyer to substitute cash (p).

Where the buyer has the option of giving a bill or note payable allowance of the longer credit may, however, be made conditional; see note (m), infra; compare Dodd v. Ponsford (1859), 6 C. B. (N. S.) 324 (payment of interest).

(l) Ashforth v. Redford (1873), L. R. 9 C. P. 20 (price payable in "from six to eight weeks": GROVE, J., doubting whether the words should not be construed fortius contra proferentem, i.e., against the seller). Price v. Nixon (1814), 5 Taunt. 338, was not cited, but is distinguishable, as containing no words of estimate. As to expressions of time generally, see title TIME.

B. 800 (six months' credit, then bill at future date); Rabe v. Otto (1903), 89 L. T. 562 (bill at future date). The case is still stronger for credit where it is the seller's fault that the bills are not given (Wayne's Merthyr Steam Coal and Iron Co. v. Morewood & Co. (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 746). As to the effect of the buyer's repudiation of the contract, see p. 237, post.

(o) The buyer is liable in damages for any loss caused to the seller by the bill or note not being given (Rabe v. Otto, supra, per KENNEDY, J.; Mussen v. Price, supra, per curiam). These damages are not the price of the goods (Rabe v. Otto, supra; Mussen v. Price, supra, per LAWRENCE, J., at p. 151; Helps v. Winterbottom (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 431, per Lord TENTERDEN, C.J., at p. 434, and LITLEDAL, J., at p. 435); compare, to the contrary, Hutchinson v. Reid (1813), 3 Camp. 329. It has been decided, on a finding of a special jury as to practice, that the seller must tender a draft for acceptance (Reed v. Mestaer (1804), coram Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at Nisi Prius, reported in Comyn on Contract (1824), 2nd ed., p. 181); see also Spaeth v. Hara (1842), 1 Dowl. (N. S.) 595; compare Foster v. Eades (1860), 2 F. & F. 103, obiter per BLACKBURN, J. It is not fraudulent for the seller secretly to repurchase the goods from the buyer, if he cannot get a bill (Harris v. Lunell (1819), 4 Moore (C. P.), 10).

(p) Anderson v. Carlisle Horse Clothing Co. (1870), 21 L. T. 760 (cash with option of bill); Rabe v. Otto, supra (price payable by bill). In the one case the seller does not give credit except on terms; in the other he at a future day, or of paying cash, and pays part of the price in cash, he cannot, under the option as of right, claim credit for the payment of the residue of the price (q).

SECT. 4.
Payment.

416. Where the price of the goods is made payable by instalments at future dates, a provision in the contract that, on the buyer's default in the payment of any instalment, the unpaid balance shall become immediately payable, is not a penalty (r). Default in paying instalment of price.

417. Notwithstanding that credit has been given, if the buyer repudiates the contract the seller may forthwith elect to treat the contract as rescinded, and, if he does so, may, without waiting for the expiration of the credit, recover the value of such of the goods as the buyer has retained (s). Effect of repudiation.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Payment of Deposit.

418. Part of the price may be payable as a deposit.

Function of deposit.

A deposit is paid primarily as security that the buyer will duly accept and pay for the goods, but, subject thereto, forms part of the price (t). Accordingly, if the buyer is unable or unwilling to accept and pay for the goods, the seller may repudiate the contract and retain the deposit (a). If the seller is unable or unwilling to deliver the goods, or to pass a good title thereto, the buyer may repudiate the contract and recover the deposit (b). The buyer may also gives credit to be secured by bill. The question is a matter of intention whether the contract is a cash or a credit transaction.

(q) Schneider v. Foster (1857), 2 H. & N. 4. The buyer has elected to pay cash, and such election is irrevocable (ibid.; Rugg v. Weir (1864), 16 C. B. (N. S.) 471, per WILLES, J.).

(r) Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1880), 5 App. Cas. 685; Sterne v. Beck (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 595, C. A. (mortgage); Protector Loan Co. v. Grice (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 592, C. A. Such a provision is often found in hire-purchase contracts; see, generally, titles BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 554 et seq.; BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., pp. 12, 13.

(s) Mavor v. Payne (1825), 3 Bing. 285; Bartholomew v. Markwick (1864), 15 C. B. (N. S.) 711. The seller can also recover damages for non-acceptance of the residue (Wayne's Merthyr Steam Coal and Iron Co. v. Morewood & Co. (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 746; Foster v. Eades (1860), 2 F. & F. 103). Damages for non-acceptance are "a sum payable, not under the contract, but due and payable as soon as the contract is broken" (Wayne's Merthyr Steam Coal and Iron Co. v. Morewood & Co., supra, per LUSH, J., at p. 749). As to damages for non-acceptance generally, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50; pp. 267, 268 post. If the seller does not elect to rescind, the provision of credit is binding upon him, even although the buyer has been guilty of fraud (Ferguson v. Carrington (1829), 9 B. & C. 59; Strutt v. Smith (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 312). A fortiori he cannot recover the price at once where the buyer has not repudiated (Wayne's Merthyr Steam Coal and Iron Co. v. Morewood & Co., supra).

(t) Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch. D. 89, C. A.; see ibid., at pp. 101 et seq., where the history of earnest, which is identical with a deposit, is traced by FRY, L.J.; Soper v. Arnold (1889), 14 App. Cas. 429, 433—435; Ockenden v. Henly (1858), E. B. & E. 485; Hall v. Burnell, [1911] 2 Ch. 551. The fact that the deposit is in the hands of a stakeholder is immaterial (Hall v. Burnell, supra).

recover it where, without the default of either party, the contract is rescinded by either party pursuant to an express power in the contract in that behalf (c).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Interest on Price.

agreement.

419. Interest on the price of the goods is prima facie not payable (d); but it may be payable by agreement (e).

An agreement by the buyer to pay interest on the price may be inferred from the course of dealing between the parties, or from usage of trade (f).

Where bill or note to be given.

420. When the goods are to be paid for by a bill of exchange or promissory note, and the bill or note is not given or made, an agreement on the part of the buyer is inferred to pay interest on the price from the time when the bill or note would have matured (g).

C. A. (sale of land); compare Ashworth v. Mounsey (1853), 9 Exch. 175 (no default by vendor); Beavan v. M'Donnell (1854), 9 Exch. 309 (no default by vendor: lunatic buyer). The buyer is not entitled to interest on the deposit (Walker v. Constable (1798), 1 Bos. & P. 306; Frühling v. Schroeder (1835), 2 Bing. (N. c.) 77).

(c) Whitbread & Co., Ltd. v. Watt, [1902] 1 Ch. 835, C. A. (purchaser's lien on land for deposit).

(d) Gordon v. Swan (1810), 2 Camp. 429, n.; 12 East, 419; Calton v. Bragg (1812), 15 East, 223 (money lent); Higgins v. Sargent (1823), 2 B. & C. 348 (policy of insurance). The rule is the same even where a balance is struck (Chalie v. York (Duke) (1806), 6 Esp. 45); and see, generally, title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., p. 37.

(e) Harrison v. Allen (1824), 2 Bing. 4.

(f) Re Anglesey (Marquis), Willmot v. Gardner, [1901] 2 Ch. 548, C. A., overruling Re Lloyd Edwards, Williams v. Trench (1891), 61 L. J. (CH.) 22; De Havilland v. Bowerbank (1807), 1 Camp. 50, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.; Bruce v. Hunter (1813), 3 Camp. 467 (agent); Ikin v. Bradley (1818), 2 Moore (C. P.), 206, Ex. Ch. (bank deposit); Eaton v. Bell (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 34 (compound); Rhodes v. Rhodes (1860), John. 653. So, too, as the price is a debt, interest may be awarded by way of damages under the conditions prescribed by the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 28, in the case of other debts; see titles DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 332, note (b); MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., p. 38. In Scotland, interest runs from the date of tender or delivery of the goods, or, as the case may be, from the date when the price was payable; and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (3), saves the Scottish rule.

Part V.—Rights of Unpaid Seller against the Goods.

SECT. 1.—In General.

SECT. 1.

In General.

421. Subject to the provisions of the Act (h) and of any statute in that behalf (i), notwithstanding that the property in the goods may have passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller of goods, as such, has, by implication of law (k), a lien on the goods for the price while he is in possession (l) of them; in case of the insolvency of the buyer, a right of stopping the goods in transitu after he has parted with the possession (n) of them; and, subject to certain statutory limitations (n), a right of resale.

Unpaid seller's three rights.

422. The seller (o) of goods is deemed to be an "unpaid seller" within the meaning of the Act, when the whole of the price has not been paid or tendered (p); or when a bill of exchange, or other negotiable instrument, has been received as conditional payment (q), and the condition on which it was received has not

Meaning of "unpaid seller."

(h) I.e., Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71); see ibid., ss. 41—43 (lien), 44—46 (stoppage in transitu), 47 (dispositions by buyer), 48 (resale by seller), 55 (no lien etc. contrary to express agreement etc.).

(i) See Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), ss. 8 (disposition by seller in possession), 9 (disposition by buyer in possession) (discussed pp. 199 et seq., ante); Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 10 (disposition by buyer being transferee of document of title). These provisions are substantially identical with the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 25 (1), (2), 47, proviso, respectively.

(k) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 39 (1).

(l) In this case the buyer has no possession, actual or constructive. As to the seller's lien, see pp. 246 et seq., post.

(m) In this case the seller, by delivering the goods to a carrier, has given the buyer constructive, but not actual, possession. As to stoppage in transitu, see pp. 247 et seq., post.

(n) See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48; and, as to resale, see pp. 263 et seq., post.

(o) Including an alien enemy trading with a British subject who has a licence from the Crown (Fenton v. Pearson (1812), 15 East, 419 (stoppage in transitu)).

(p) Hodgson v. Loy (1797), 7 Term Rep. 440; Feise v. Wray (1802), 3 East, 93 (stoppage); Milgate v. Kebble (1841), 3 Man. & G. 100 (lien); Nicholls v. Hart (1831), 5 C. & P. 179 (payment by acceptance of composition). The price must of course be due: "There can be no lien without an immediate right of action for the debt" (Raitt v. Mitchell (1815), 4 Camp. 146, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 150). The existence of a set-off without an agreement to set off is not a payment of the debt (Pinnock v. Harrison (1838), 3 M. & W. 532); and an offer by the creditor to set off a debt due from the person having a lien does not amount to a tender so as to discharge the lien (Clarke v. Fell (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 404). The "whole of the price" mentioned in the text, supra, is the price of all the goods where the contract is entire; in severable contracts it would, as a rule, be only the apportioned price of such part of the goods as is retained; see p. 240, post. As to tender, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 417 et seq.

(q) As to payment by negotiable instrument, see p. 234, ante; and see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 447, 449.

SECT. 1.
In General.

been fulfilled by reason of the dishonour of the instrument (r) or otherwise (s).

If the buyer become insolvent, the fact that the seller has negotiated the buyer's acceptance taken as conditional payment, and that the instrument is outstanding, does not prevent the seller being an unpaid seller (t).

Seller, position when unpaid on account current.

423. Where there is an unsettled account current between the parties—

(1) If the seller appropriates goods to the buyer specifically on account of a debit balance then existing against him, he cannot exercise any rights of an unpaid seller against those goods by reason that the balance of the account may subsequently be reversed in his favour (a);

(2) If the seller draws upon the buyer specifically against particular goods, he does not lose his rights as unpaid seller in respect thereof merely because it is uncertain at the time when he exercises such rights whether the balance of the account is or is not in his favour (b): it lies upon the buyer to prove the negative (c).

Seller's rights ordinarily indivisible.

424. The unpaid seller's rights extend over every part of the goods for the price of all of them (d), except where, by the terms of the contract or otherwise, the price has been apportioned (e). If, however, the buyer becomes insolvent, the unpaid seller's rights are, by implication of law and notwithstanding the apportionment

(r) Feise v. Wray (1802), 3 East, 93; Griffiths v. Perry (1859), 1 E. & E. 680; Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491, per MELLISH, L.J., at p. 501; Re Nathan, Ex parte Stapleton (1879), 10 Ch. D. 586, C. A. The words "or otherwise" seem to contemplate the case of the insolvency of the buyer during the period of credit, as in Valpy v. Oakeley (1851), 16 Q. B. 941; Griffiths v. Perry, supra.

(s) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (1). Where the bill is running there is no debt, and so the seller is paid. So also where the bill, although it may be overdue, is outstanding in the hands of an indorsee or holder. The case of the buyer's insolvency is an exception; see the cases cited in note (t), infra.

(t) Miles v. Gorton (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 504, 512; Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., supra, overruling on this point Bunney v. Poyntz (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 568; Re Defries (J.) & Sons, Ltd., Eichholz v. Defries (J.) & Sons, Ltd., [1909] 2 Ch. 423.

(a) This proposition may, it is submitted, be gathered from Vertue v. Jewell (1814), 4 Camp. 31, as explained by Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in Patten v. Thompson (1816), 5 M. & S. 350, at p. 360. Vertue v. Jewell, supra, was a case of stoppage in transitu, but the same principle should apply generally; see also Smith v. Bowles (1797), 2 Esp. 578 (remittance of money in payment of debt).

(b) Wood v. Jones (1825), 7 Dow. & Ry. (κ. B.) 126 (stoppage in transitu); see also The Tigress (1863), Brown. & Lush. 38.

(c) Wood v. Jones, supra, per ABBOTT, C.J., at p. 129.

(d) Wentworth v. Outhwaite (1842), 10 M. & W. 436, 452; Payne v. Shadbolt (1808), 1 Camp. 427 (lien); Marks v. Laheè (1837), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 408 (engraver's lien); Coombs v. Noad (1842), 10 M. & W. 127 (fuller). It is conceived that, in the case of entire contracts, "the whole of the price" in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (1) (a), means the price of all the goods; see note (p), p. 239, ante.

(e) As in the case of instalment contracts, where the instalments are to be separately paid for. In such cases the seller's rights are apportioned of the price, exercisable over every portion of the goods not paid for in respect of any part of the price of the goods due under the contract (f).

SECT. 1.
In General.

425. With regard to the rights of the unpaid seller against the goods (g), the term "seller" includes any person who is in the position of a seller, as, for instance, an agent of the seller to whom the bill of lading has been indorsed (h), or a consignor or agent (i) who has himself paid, or is directly responsible for, the price (k).

Meaning of "seller."

The same rights are possessed (l) by a principal consigning goods to his factor on a joint account, where the factor is a debtor to the principal for a proportion of the goods (m), by a person who has agreed to buy goods and who resells the goods, not having at the time of the resale the property in them (n), and by a surety for the buyer who has paid the price to the seller (o).

(Re Edwards, Ex parte Chalmers (1873), 8 Ch. App. 289, 293; Morgan v. Bain (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 15, per BRETT, J., at p. 25).

(f) Re Edwards, Ex parte Chalmers, supra. If any portion of the goods is paid for, the seller's rights over that portion of them are of course gone (Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 205).

(g) The words of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), are "In this part of the Act," i.e., in ibid., ss. 38—48.

(h) Morison v. Gray (1824), 2 Bing. 260 (stoppage in transitu). Although BEST, C.J. (ibid., at p. 261), says that the transfer of the bill of lading conferred on the agent a sufficient right of property to enable him to bring trover, the real point decided was that the agent had conferred upon him a right to the possession of the goods (Burgos v. Nascimento (1908), 100 L. T. 71). It was not intended to overrule Waring v. Cox (1808), 1 Camp. 369, or Coxe v. Harden (1803), 4 East, 211, where it was held that the agent could not bring trover or assumpsit.

(i) Feise v. Wray (1803), 3 East, 93; Van Casteel v. Booker (1848), 2 Exch. 691 (agent abroad); Tucker v. Humphrey (1828), 4 Bing. 516; Mercantile Bank v. Gladstone (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 233 (agent abroad) (all cases of stoppage in transitu); Hawkes v. Dunn (1831), 1 Tyr. 413 (lien); Falk v. Fletcher (1865), 18 C. B. (N. S.) 403 (right of property in agent).

(k) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (2). A partnership selling goods to a member of the firm is a real seller (Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, C. A.).

(l) It may be that these persons fall within the words of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (2), as being persons "in the position of a seller."

(m) Newsom v. Thornton (1805), 6 East, 17. Kinloch v. Craig (1790), 3 Term Rep. 783, H. L., was not a case of stoppage in transitu or of lien as against a buyer, but one in which a principal prevented the goods coming into his agent's possession so as to establish a lien of a factor.

(n) Jenkyns v. Osborne (1844), 7 Man. & G. 678. "Seller" in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), includes a person who agrees to sell (ibid., s. 62 (1); see p. 121, ante). Quære, however, whether this particular case does not rather fall under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 39 (2); see p. 258, post).

(o) A surety had no right of stoppage in transitu at common law (Siffken v. Wray (1805), 6 East, 371), but it was decided in Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 195, that, having paid the price, an agent of the buyer, who was in the position of a surety for his principal, could exercise against him the seller's right of lien by virtue of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 5, as the seller's lien was a "security"; compare Re Russell, Russell v. Shoolbred (1885), 29 Ch. D. 254, C. A.; and see Re M'Myn, Lightbown v. M'Myn (1886), 33 Ch. D. 575; title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., pp. 521, 523.

SECT. 2.
Seller's
Lien.

Cases in which lien exercised.

SECT. 2.—Seller's Lien.

SUB-SECT. 1.—When the Lien Exists.

426. Subject to the provisions of the Act (p), the unpaid seller (q) of goods who is in possession (r) of them is entitled to retain possession of them until payment or tender (s) of the price (t)—

(1) where the goods have been sold without any stipulation as to credit (a);

(2) where the goods have been sold on credit, but the term of credit has expired (b); or

(3) where the buyer becomes insolvent (c).

(p) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 42 (part delivery intended as full delivery), 43 (1) (termination of lien), 47 (loss of lien as against buyer's disponent), 55 (effect of express agreement etc.).

(q) For the definition of "unpaid seller," see ibid., s. 38 (1); p. 239, ante.

(r) Including the possession of the seller's servant or bailee (Owenson v. Morse (1796), 7 Term Rep. 64). The Act does not define "possession." The fact that the buyer is able under the contract to exercise some degree of possession or control is not inconsistent with the seller's possession under a lien. The test of the loss of lien is whether the buyer has uncontrolled possession, or not (Lord's Trustee v. Great Eastern Railway, [1908] 2 K. B. 54, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 69, where the principles are considered); see Milgate v. Kebble (1841), 3 Man. & G. 100 (seller gives inner, but retains outer, key); Re Westlake, Ex parte Willoughby (1881), 16 Ch. D. 604 (barge: some control by debtor); Hilton v. Tucker (1888), 39 Ch. D. 669 (pledge: delivery of key); Great Eastern Railway v. Lord's Trustee, [1909] A. C. 109 (carrier's lien: goods on creditor's land leased to debtor); see also title LIEN, Vol. XIX., pp. 4 et seq.

(s) Tender of the price duly made divests the seller's lien (Martindale v. Smith (1841), 1 Q. B. 389); see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 28.

(t) Including sums, such as customs duties, treated by the contract as part of the price (Winks v. Hassall (1829), 9 B. & C. 372), but not including the expenses of custody in the exercise of the seller's lien (British Empire Shipping Co. v. Somes (1859), E. B. & E. 353, 367, Ex. Ch.; affirmed (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 338). But a lien may, it seems, exist even in the case of an illegal contract (Scarfe v. Morgan (1838), 4 M. & W. 270 (Sunday contract)), or where the debt is barred by the Statute of Limitations (Spears v. Hartly (1800), 3 Esp. 81; Re Broomhead (1847), 5 Dow. & L. 52), the maxim being melior est conditio possidentis (Taylor v. Chester (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 309); see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 42; and, as to lien generally, see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., pp. 1 et seq.

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (1) (a). Here the price is payable on delivery; for, where nothing is said, payment and delivery are concurrent (ibid., s. 28); see p. 204, ante.

(b) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (1) (b). In this case the price has become payable on delivery (New v. Swain (1828), Dan. & Ll. 193).

(c) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (1) (c). The rule is the same whether credit has been given or not, and whether or not insolvency occurs during the period of credit (Bloxam v. Sanders (1825), 4 B. & C. 941; Griffiths v. Perry (1859), 1 E. & E. 680; Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491; Grice v. Richardson (1877), 3 App. Cas. 319, P. C.; Re Westlake, Ex parte Willoughby, supra). The insolvent buyer is entitled to delivery if he pays or tenders the price of the goods in cash, whether cash was payable or not (Re Nathan, Ex parte Stapleton (1879), 10 Ch. D. 586, C. A.), for, in the case of insolvency, the law allows the seller to alter the terms of the contract (Re Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co., Ex parte Carnforth, Hæmatite Iron Co. (1876), 4 Ch. D. 108, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 113; see note (r), p. 240, ante). The price of previous deliveries unpaid for must be included (Re Edwards, Ex parte

427. The seller may exercise his right of lien notwithstanding that he is in possession of the goods as agent or bailee of the buyer (d).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Part Delivery.

428. Where an unpaid seller has made part delivery of the goods, he may exercise his right of lien on the remainder, unless such part delivery has been made in such circumstances as to show an agreement to waive the lien (e).

In particular, such an agreement may be inferred where the delivery is of an essential part of the goods sold, as, for example, an essential part of a machine (f); or where the character of the person taking delivery, or the object for which it is taken, is such as to show a common intention to treat the part delivery as a delivery of all the goods (g); or where the part delivery takes place in circumstances showing that the seller's agent in possession of the goods has acknowledged to the buyer that he holds the goods on his behalf (h).

Chalmers (1873), 8 Ch. App. 289). Default in that behalf by the buyer, or his trustee in bankruptcy, entitles the seller, after the lapse of a reasonable time, to repudiate the contract altogether (Re Nathan, Ex parte Stapleton (1879), 10 Ch. D. 586, C. A.).

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (2); Townley v. Crump (1835), 4 Ad. & El. 58; Miles v. Gorton (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 504; Grice v. Richardson (1877), 3 App. Cas. 319, P. C. (all cases of insolvency); compare titles AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 197 et seq.; BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 547 et seq.; LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 8. At common law the lien was not exercisable after an attornment by the seller to the buyer if the buyer was merely in default, being solvent (Cusack v. Robinson (1861), 1 B. & S. 299, 308); see, further, the cases on attornment under actual receipt, cited in note (n), p. 132, ante. On the buyer's insolvency, however, the lien revived (Grice v. Richardson, supra). The rule has now been made a general one. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (2), is of course not applicable where the goods are sold on credit, there being during the credit no "right of lien," and it must also be read subject to ibid., s. 43 (1) (see p. 244, post), so that, if the lien is lost, and the goods are afterwards redelivered to the seller as bailee, the seller's right does not revive. As to loss of lien, see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., pp. 28, 29. The right may also be excluded under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; see p. 279, post.

(e) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 42; Bunney v. Poyntz (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 568 (seller's own possession); Tanner v. Scovell (1845), 14 M. & W. 28; Dixon v. Yates (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 313 (part delivery to satisfy sub-contract); Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, C. A. (carrier retains lien for freight). The fact that the goods are in the seller's own possession is important to show that a part delivery is not intended as a complete delivery (Miles v. Gorton (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 504, per BAYLEY, B., at p. 510). The "right of lien" must exist in the first instance. Thus, if the goods are deliverable by instalments, which are not to be separately paid for, as the price is not payable until after complete delivery, no lien exists, and the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 42, has no application. If the instalments are to be separately paid for the lien is ordinarily severable; see pp. 240, 241, ante.

429. The unpaid seller of goods loses his lien thereon when he delivers his goods to a carrier or other bailee (i) for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, without reserving the right of disposal (k) of the goods (l); when the buyer or his agent lawfully obtains possession of the goods (m); or by waiver thereof (n).

Where at the time of the contract the goods are in the possession of the seller's agent (o), the lien is lost where the agent, with the consent of the seller, acknowledges to the buyer that he holds the goods on his behalf (p).

BRAMWELL, L.J., in Re Kiell, Ex parte Falk (1880), 14 Ch. D. 446, C. A., at p. 456, and by BRETT, L.J., in Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, C. A., at p. 74. But Hammond v. Anderson (1803), 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 69, has also been explained as a case where the buyer had, by weighing all the goods sold for an entire price, taken actual possession of all of them and then separated part (ibid., per CHAMBRE, J., at p. 72; Bunney v. Poyntz (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 568, per PARKE, J., at p. 571; Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper, supra, per COTTON, L.J., at p. 77); see also Wood v. Tassell (1844), 6 Q. Ryder* (1816), 6 Taunt. 433; Ruck v. Hatfield (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 632; Thompson v. Trail (1826), 6 B. & C. 36 (all cases in which the seller retained the mate's receipt for the goods). Thus, a shipment, where the bill of lading is taken to the order of the seller or his agent, is a delivery to the master as the agent of the seller (Wait v. Baker (1848), 2 Exch. 1, per PARKE, B.; Gabarron v. Kreeft, Kreeft v. Thompson (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 274, per CLEASBY, B.). Shackels* (1828), 8 B. & C. 612; Dixon v. Yates (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 313; Townley v. Crump (1835), 4 Ad. & El. 58. A special interest may, by agreement etc., be reserved to the seller notwithstanding delivery (Dodsley v. Varley (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 632), or the seller may, by agreement, be authorised to retake the goods (Richards v. Symons (1845), 8 Q. B. 90); see p. 265, post. To divest the lien possession must be taken in the capacity of buyer or buyer's agent, not as the seller's special bailee; see pp. 245, note (o), 247, post. It must also be noticed that under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 43 (1) (b), the buyer must take lawful possession, whereas in ibid., s. 45 (1), (2), the word "lawful" is omitted; see pp. 248, 251, post.

(o) Attornment by a seller himself in possession does not divest the lien (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (2)); see p. 243, ante.

(p) See the cases cited in regard to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 29 (3), in note (c), p. 210, ante; see also Castle v. Swarder (1861), 6 H. & N. 828, Ex. Where at the time of the contract the goods are in the possession of a third person, not being the seller's agent, the lien is lost where the seller puts the goods at the disposal of the buyer, who is able, without interference (q) by such third person, to take actual or constructive possession of the goods (r).

SECT. 2.
Seller's
Lien.

Where at the time of the contract the goods are in the possession of the buyer himself as the seller's bailee, the lien is lost where the contract of sale is complete (s).

430. An unpaid seller of goods, having a lien thereon, does not lose his lien by reason only that he has obtained judgment for the price of the goods (t). Effect of judgment.

431. Notwithstanding that the goods are in the possession of the buyer, there may, by express agreement, course of dealing, or usage of trade (a), be reserved to the seller, as between him and the buyer (b), a special property or interest in the goods until the price is paid, analogous to a lien (c). Such property or interest is not a Quasi-lien.

If the sale is made through the seller's warehouseman or other bailee the completion of the contract is ipso facto an attornment (Simmonds v. Humble (1862), 13 C. B. (N. s.) 258).

Marking the goods by the buyer, when coupled with other circumstances, is evidence in such cases of a constructive delivery; see Tansley v. Turner, supra; Cooper v. Bill, supra. Such a marking by a sub-buyer is evidence of the seller's assent to the sub-sale under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47 (Stoveld v. Hughes (1811), 14 East, 308); see p. 259, post.

Moon*, [1896] 2 Q. B. 283; Kilpin v. Ratley, [1892] 1 Q. B. 582 (gift after delivery); and see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., p. 405).

But the seller loses his lien if he causes the goods to be taken in execution at his own suit, for the sheriff acquires possession (Jacobs v. Latour (1828), 5 Bing. 130); see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 6, note (x); compare title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 54, 55.

right in security over the goods, unless the seller obtains possession thereof, but is a merely personal right enforceable by action (d).

432. A right of lien may be waived (e), expressly or by implication. It is waived by implication where the seller takes security for the price, the terms of which are inconsistent with the existence of the lien implied by law (f); or where by his words or conduct he dispenses with payment or tender of the price, as where he repudiates the contract by refusing (g) or rendering himself unable (h) to deliver the goods, or by otherwise conducting himself in relation to them in a manner inconsistent with the buyer's right to receive them on payment or tender (i); or where, without relying on his right of lien, he claims to retain the goods on some other ground (k); or where his conduct is such that he is deemed by law to have waived his lien as against a sub-buyer or other disponent of the buyer (l).

SUB-SECT. 1.—When the Right Exists.

434. Subject to the provisions of the Act (p), when the buyer of goods becomes insolvent (q), the unpaid seller (r) who has parted with the possession (s) of the goods has the right of stopping them in transitu, that is to say, he may resume possession of the goods as long as they are in course of transit (t), and may retain them (a) until payment or tender of the price (b).

(o) Jacobs v. Latour (1828), 5 Bing. 130 (goods sold by sheriff to creditor after execution at his suit against debtor); Sweet v. Pym, supra. Allen v. Smith (1862), 11 W. R. 440, Ex. Ch., by analogy shows that the lien would not be lost by the delivery of the goods by the seller to the buyer for a mere temporary purpose. Further, the seller may revest his lien by peaceably retaking goods fraudulently removed by the buyer (Wallace v. Woodgate (1824), Ry. & M. 193). Probably, however, in such a case the lien is not lost, the buyer not having obtained "lawful" possession; see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 43 (1) (b); p. 244, ante; and see title LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 29.

These words also show that stoppage in transitu in the strict meaning only exists where the goods have become the property of the buyer. The common law was the same at the date of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) (Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 581; *Phelps, Stokes & Co. v. C., 11th ed., p. 693, and notes; see also title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., pp. 96 et seq. Stoppage in transitu in the proper sense applies only where both property and right to possession has passed to the buyer, but not actual possession (*Gibson v. The right of stoppage in transitu is one available only against the goods themselves (c). It is therefore, for instance, not available against the proceeds of an insurance policy effected by the buyer against damage to the goods during the transit (d).

435. Goods may be stopped in transitu notwithstanding that the buyer has not been found to be, or is not, insolvent at the time of the stoppage, if he be so by the time of the termination of the transit (e).

436. If, after stoppage in transitu, the buyer proves not to be insolvent, he is entitled to the delivery of the goods, and to receive an indemnity from the seller for any loss caused by the stoppage (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Duration of Transit.

437. Goods are deemed to be in course of transit from the time when they are delivered to a carrier by land or water, or other bailee for the purpose of transmission (g) to the buyer, until the buyer, or his agent in that behalf (h), takes delivery (i) of them from such carrier or other bailee (k).

Goods are thus deemed to be in course of transit so long as they remain in the possession of the carrier, or other bailee for transmission (l), in his capacity as such (m), whether the goods are actually in motion on their journey, or are lodged in any place in the course of transmission (n). regard to the definition of delivery above cited. The point was previously doubtful; see Whitehead v. Anderson (1842), 9 M. & W. 518, per PARKE, B., at p. 534; but compare Blackburn, Contract of Sale, 1st ed., p. 259; 2nd ed., p. 375. It should also be noticed that under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 45 (6) (see p. 252, post), a wrongful refusal by the carrier to deliver terminates the transit. The inference is that a rightful refusal does not.

SECT. 3.

Stoppage
in Transitu.

The course of transit of the goods may be fixed, either by the contract of sale (p), or by the subsequent directions of the buyer to the seller (q).

How fixed.

Effect of seller's ignorance or knowledge of destination.

438. The seller's ignorance of the destination of the goods contemplated by the buyer does not prevent the goods being in transit until arrival, if the goods were, under the contract, delivered by the seller to a carrier for transmission to such destination (r); but, where the goods, previously to their arrival, are delivered to the buyer or his agent to hold the goods for the buyer, the seller's knowledge of the destination does not prolong the transit until the goods arrive there (s).

Bill of lading transferred to buyer etc.

439. The mere fact that a bill of lading is transferred by the seller to the buyer (t), or that, by the terms of a bill of lading, the buyer (a) or a sub-buyer (b) is the shipper or consignee of the goods, does not prevent the goods being in transitu on and after shipment.

T. 577 (mate's receipt handed by seller to buyer: bill of lading in buyer's name); Jobson v. Eppenheim & Co. (1905), 21 T. L. R. 468; compare Kemp v. Ismay, Imrie & Co. (1909), 100 L. T. 996 (goods to be despatched to forwarding agent for shipment: no further orders of buyer necessary).

(t) The Tigress (1863), Brown. & Lush. 38; Fraser v. Witt (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 64. Similarly, the delivery by the seller to the buyer's agent of a delivery order on the seller's agent, which the buyer transfers to the carrier as his authority to receive the goods, does not of itself amount to a taking of actual possession by the buyer's agent previously to shipment (Jackson v. Nichol (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 508). There would seem to be no case in which the seller himself transfers a bill of lading to a sub-buyer; it may be that such a transfer would be an "assent" to a sub-sale, so as to divest a right of stoppage under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47; see p. 258, post.

(a) Thompson v. Trail (1826), 6 B. & C. 36; Lyons v. Hoffnung (1890), 15 App. Cas. 391, 395, P. C. (buyer stated to be shipper); Brindley & Co. v. Cilgwyn Slate Co. (1885), 55 L. J. (Q. B.) 67; Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, C. A.; Kemp v. Ismay, Imrie & Co., supra (buyer consignee). But goods are not in transit if the buyer, previously to shipment, obtains possession, and by taking the bill of lading in his own name sends the goods on a fresh transit (Bethell v. Clark (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 553, per CAVE, J., at p. 562; Re Bruno, Silva & Son, Ex parte Francis & Co., Ltd., supra; see also Re Gurney, Ex parte Hughes (1892), 67 L. T. 598 (dock company's receipt given to buyer)).

(b) Re Knight, Ex parte Golding, Davis & Co., Ltd. (1880), 13 Ch. D. 628, C. A. The privity of the seller to this transaction would not seem to be an "assent" to the sub-sale under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47; see p. 259, post.

440. If the buyer or his agent in that behalf obtains (c) delivery (d) of the goods before their arrival at the appointed destination, the transit is at an end (e).

SECT. 3.

in Transitu.

441. If, after the arrival of the goods at the appointed destination (f), the carrier or other bailee acknowledges to the buyer or his agent that he holds the goods on his behalf, and continues in possession of them as bailee for the buyer or his agent, the transit is at an end, and it is immaterial that a further destination (g) for the goods may have been indicated by the buyer (h).

442. Where the goods are delivered by the seller or a carrier to an agent on behalf of the buyer, the question whether the goods, while in the possession of such agent, are in transit, or whether the transit has ended by the delivery of the goods to him, depends upon whether the agent is a bailee for the transmission (i) of the goods

(c) As to the effect of a demand of delivery before the arrival of the goods at the destination, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 45 (6); p. 252, post.

The rule in the text covers the case where the buyer obtains possession of the goods constructively by the attornment of the carrier to him (Foster v. Frampton (1826), 6 B. & C. 107; compare Coventry v. Gladstone (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 44, where evidence of attornment was wanting); see also title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., pp. 96, 97.

(f) The mere arrival of the goods at the appointed destination is insufficient to end the transit; there must be a delivery to the buyer or his agent (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 44; see p. 248, ante), or the carrier must agree to hold the goods for the buyer or his agent (Bethell v. Clark (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 553, per CAVE, J., at p. 561). As to attornment by the carrier before the arrival of the goods, see note (e), supra.

The assent of both carrier and buyer to the attornment is necessary (Foster v. Frampton (1826), 6 B. & C. 107 (acts of ownership by buyer with consent of carrier); Wentworth v. Outhwaite (1842), 10 M. & W. 436 (notice by carrier that goods remained at rent); Re Millo, Ex parte Gouda (1872), 20 W. R. 981; *Kendal v. It is doubtful whether the simple act of allowing the goods to be marked or samples to be taken from them is sufficient to show an attornment, unless such acts are accompanied by other circumstances (Whitehead v. Anderson, supra, at p. 535; compare Foster v. Frampton, supra, where such circumstances existed). The fact that the carrier retains his lien for the freight is relevant, but not conclusive, to disprove an attornment (Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper, supra; Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 584; Allan v. Gripper (1832), 2 Cr. & J. 218).

The fact that the seller has the buyer's authority to instruct the agent as to the further transmission of the goods, or that, on the contrary, at the time of the contract of sale the agent has received or will receive orders from the buyer with regard to such transmission, is relevant to prove or disprove, respectively, that the goods, while in the possession of the agent, are in transit (l).

443. If the goods are rejected by the buyer, and the carrier or other bailee continues in possession of them (m), the transit is not deemed to be at an end, even if the seller has refused to receive them back (n).

Such a rejection by the buyer is not a fraudulent preference of the seller within the meaning of the law of bankruptcy (o).

446. A delivery of the goods on board the buyer's own vessel(t), whether it be a general ship or one sent specially for the goods, is not a delivery to the master as agent to take delivery for the buyer, if the master receives the goods in the capacity of a carrier only(a). If the goods are so received, the fact that the master has no authority to receive the goods except as an agent to take delivery for the buyer is immaterial(b).

Brown (1850), 4 Exch. 786 (demand on arrival of goods by buyer's assignees, and tender of freight); see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 98. A refusal is wrongful where the buyer is entitled to demand delivery; and Lord BLACKBURN suggests that "the actual refusal must be so tortious as to render the middleman liable in trover"; see Blackburn, Contract of Sale, 1st ed., p. 260; 2nd ed., p. 375. The language of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 45 (6), is wide enough to cover the case of a refusal to deliver the goods on a demand made before the arrival of the goods at their destination, a demand which a consignee is competent to make (London and North Western Rail. Co. v. Bartlett (1861), 7 H. & N. 400; Scothorn v. South Staffordshire Rail. Co. (1853), 8 Exch. 341; Cork Distilleries Co. v. Great Southern and Western Rail. Co. (Ireland) (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 269). But the carrier will be entitled to demand his full freight (Metcalf v. Britannia Ironworks Co. (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 613, per MELLOR and QUAIN, J.J., at p. 632). In Jackson v. Nichol (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 508, 519 (carrier's wrongful refusal to deliver on tender of freight), however, a demand of the goods before the end of the journey was held to be insufficient to terminate the transit, there being no actual delivery and no attornment by the carrier (see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 97), but it is doubtful whether this case is good law; see also Coventry v. Gladstone (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 44 (freight paid: carrier's promise to deliver when goods could be got at); title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 98.

(r) Wentworth v. Outhwaite (1842), 10 M. & W. 436.

(s) Ibid. The lien of a seller is ordinarily indivisible; see p. 240, ante.

(t) Similar principles apply to the buyer's cart, waggon, or other vehicle. It does not follow, as a proposition of law, that goods delivered to the buyer's own vehicle are not in transitu (Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 205, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 219); but there is of course no transit after delivery if the vehicle is the destination of the goods (Berndtson v. Strang (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 481, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 489).

(a) Turner v. Liverpool Docks (Trustees) (1851), 6 Exch. 543, Ex. Ch.; Schotsmans v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co. (1867), 2 Ch. App. 332. Strang*, supra, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 491. If the seller, intending to deliver the goods to a carrier, by mistake delivers on board the buyer's own vessel, such delivery is perhaps not a delivery to the buyer (Schotsmans v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., supra, per Lord CHELMSFORD, L.C., at p. 335).

goods on board the buyer's vessel, of the right of disposal of the goods (c) shows that the goods are delivered to the master of the vessel in the capacity of a carrier, notwithstanding that the seller may afterwards transfer the bill of lading to the buyer (d).

447. When goods are delivered to a vessel (e) chartered by the seller the goods are, nevertheless, in transit (f), unless by the terms of the charter there is a demise of the ship, so that the seller is the temporary owner thereof; if this is so, the seller preserves his lien, and no question of stoppage in transitu arises (g).

When goods are delivered to a vessel (e) chartered by the buyer, it depends on the circumstances of the particular case whether the goods are in the possession of the master as a carrier, or as agent to the buyer (h). If under the terms of the charter the buyer is the temporary owner of the ship under a demise thereof, a delivery of the goods on board the ship is a delivery to the master as agent for the buyer, unless (i) the seller has reserved the right of disposal (k); if the buyer is not the temporary owner of the ship, the goods are prima facie in transit (l).

Such a transfer may pass the property; Re Tappenbeck, Ex parte Banner (1876), 2 Ch. D. 278, 288, C. A. But the right of stopping the goods in transitu remains, as being a right exercisable as against the possession (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 44; see p. 247, ante).

(e) Similar principles apply to the seller's or buyer's hired vehicles. See Trinity House (Master, etc.) v. Clark (1815), 4 M. & S. 288, where Lord ELLENBOROUGH, at p. 299, comparing a ship and a cart, shows that possession of the goods may pass to the hirer, notwithstanding that the cart is in charge of the latter's waggoner.

Where part delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer or his agent in that behalf, the remainder of the goods may be stopped in transitu, unless such part delivery has been made in such circumstances as to show an agreement^(m) to give up possession of the whole of the goods⁽ⁿ⁾. The fact that the carrier retains his lien for the freight of the goods is relevant to show that a part delivery is not intended to be a constructive delivery of all the goods^(o).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Exercise of Right.

449. The unpaid seller may ^(p) exercise his right of stoppage in transitu either by taking actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other bailee in whose possession the goods are^(q). Such notice may be given either to the person in actual possession of the goods or to his principal. In the latter case the notice, to be effectual, must be given at such time and in such to buyer); Re Cock, Ex parte Rosevear China Clay Co. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 560, C. A. (verbal charter: no bill of lading).

^(m) As the goods are ex hypothesi in the possession of a carrier, the agreement "to give up possession" would seem to be one between the person taking delivery and the carrier, and not between such person and the seller; and the rule has been so expressly stated (Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper (1879), 11 Ch. D. 68, 78, C. A.).

⁽ⁿ⁾ Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 45 (7); Tanner v. Scovell (1845), 14 M. & W. 28 (part delivery by wharfinger: no evidence of his attornment to buyer); Re Piggott, Ex parte Cross (1851), Fonbl. 215; Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper, supra, at pp. 74, 77, explaining Slubey v. Heyward (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 504 (attornment by carrier); Hammond v. Anderson (1803), 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 69 (a similar case: weighing by buyer of all the goods); Meehan & Sons, Ltd. v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1911), 48 Sc. L. R. 987; and see title CARRIERS. Vol. IV., p. 98. The rule before the Act has been thus stated: "Delivery of part operates as a constructive delivery of the whole only where the delivery of part takes place in the course of the delivery of the whole, and the taking possession by the buyer of that part is the acceptance of constructive possession of the whole" (Bolton v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co. (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 431, per WILLES, J., at p. 440). As to the effect on a lien of part delivery, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 42; p. 243, ante.

^(o) Re McLaren, Ex parte Cooper, supra; Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 584; Edwards v. Brewer (1837), 2 M. & W. 375 (goods landed by carrier at neutral wharf "subject to freight and charges"). The fact that a carrier's lien exists is not, however, conclusive; the carrier's warehouse may be the destination of the goods (Allan v. Gripper (1832), 2 Cr. & J. 218), or the carrier may attorn to the buyer subject to the lien (Kemp v. Falk, supra, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 584). In Crawshaw v. Eades (1823), 1 B. & C. 181, the goods had not been weighed to ascertain the freight.

^(p) The methods of stoppage here mentioned are probably not exhaustive. In Snee v. Prescott (1744), 1 Atk. 245, Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 250, said that the seller might recover the goods by any means not criminal. Thus, a demand of the bill of lading is a good stoppage (Re Love, Ex parte Watson (1877), 5 Ch. D. 35, C. A.); and in Hutchings v. Nunes (1863), 1 Moo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 243, taking possession of a small part of the goods in the name of the whole was treated as effectual. It has not been decided whether a notice to stop may be given to the consignee of the goods (Phelps, Stokes & Co. v. Comber (1885), 29 Ch. D. 813, C. A.).

circumstances that the principal by the exercise of reasonable diligence may communicate it to his servant or agent in time to prevent a delivery to the buyer (r).

It is not necessary for the seller to prove to the carrier that events have happened which justify a stoppage in transitu (s).

carrier on receipt of notice.

450. Where notice of stoppage in transitu is given by the seller to the carrier or other bailee in possession of the goods, he must (t) redeliver the goods to, or according to the directions of, the seller (a). The expenses of such redelivery must be borne by the seller (b).

If the carrier, after a valid notice of stoppage in transitu, delivers the goods to the buyer, he is guilty of a conversion thereof (c).

(r) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 46 (1); Whitehead v. Anderson (1842), 9 M. & W. 518; Bethell v. Clark (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 615, C. A. It is the duty of the shipowner to forward the notice (Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 585, disapproving of the contrary opinion of BRAMWELL, L.J., in Re Kiell, Ex parte Falk (1880), 14 Ch. D. 446, C. A., at p. 455). It may be that this is a duty "declared by the Act," so as to be enforceable by action under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 57.

(s) In other words the seller need not prove his right to stop: he stops at his peril (The Tigress (1863), Brown. & Lush. 38).

(t) A duty being here cast upon the carrier, it is enforceable by action (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 57). The action would seem to be one founded in tort, for, as the law gives the seller the right to put an end to the contract of carriage by demanding possession of the goods, a dealing by the carrier with them inconsistently with such right is wrongful (Pontifex v. Midland Rail. Co. (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 23, 26). The duty of the carrier is stated by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), in unqualified terms, but it would seem that he is not bound to redeliver the goods unless his freight is tendered or a tender be waived. As to waiver, see Jones v. Tarleton (1842), 9 M. & W. 675; Scarfe v. Morgan (1838), 4 M. & W. 270 (tender not waived); Kerford v. Mondel (1859), 28 L. J. (EX.) 303; Thompson v. Trail (1826), 6 B. & C. 36. The seller's right of stoppage is subordinate to the carrier's particular lien; see p. 257, post. As to the duty of a carrier in relation to stoppage in transitu of goods in his possession, generally, see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., pp. 96 et seq.

(a) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 46 (2); The Tigress, supra, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 45; Jackson v. Nichol (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 508 (trover against carrier's agent); Mechan & Sons, Ltd. v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1911), 48 Sc. L. R. 987; see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 98. In case of doubt the carrier should interplead (The Tigress, supra); see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., p. 99; and see, generally, title INTERPLEADER, Vol. XVII., pp. 577 et seq.

(b) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 46 (2); and see title CARRIERS, Vol. IV., pp. 98, 99. This provision as to expenses is new, and regulates the rights of the carrier and of the seller inter se, in the absence of a contract to the contrary. But, if goods are delivered freight free on the buyer's own ship, and the master has authority so to receive them, the seller, having stopped the goods, is entitled to have them redelivered without a tender of freight, as against persons to whom, without the knowledge of the seller, the buyer had sold the ship (Mercantile Bank v. Gladstone (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 233).

(c) Pontifex v. Midland Rail. Co. (1877), 3 Q. B. D. 23; The Tigress, supra; Ormonde Cycle Co. v. Bailey and Leatham (1895), 11 T. L. R. 219; see also Syeds v. Hay (1791), 4 Term Rep. 260; Mills v. Ball (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 457 (where the wharfinger agreed expressly to hold the goods for the seller); and compare Allan v. Gripper (1832), 2

Where the delivery by the carrier of the goods to the buyer after a valid notice of stoppage in transitu has been brought about under a bonâ fide mistake, the mistake does not cause the delivery to terminate the transit, and the buyer is bound to return the goods to the seller on demand (d). If he omits to do so he is guilty of a conversion of the goods (e).

451. Any act relied upon as a stoppage in transitu must have been done with that intent, and by virtue of a right in respect of the goods adverse to that of the buyer (f). If the act is so done, it is immaterial that it is done with the buyer's consent (g).

(l) Bird v. Brown (1850), 4 Exch. 786; see also Siffken v. Wray, supra. Where the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer (n), the unpaid seller (o) has, in addition to his other remedies (p), a right of withholding delivery similar to and co-extensive with his rights of lien and stoppage in transitu where the property has passed to the buyer (q).

(m) Hutchings v. Nunes (1863), 1 Moo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 243. In Bird v. Brown (1850), 4 Exch. 786, the stoppage was not made by the agent until after the buyer had demanded the goods, whereas in Hutchings v. Nunes, supra, the stoppage was made by the agent in due time. Bird v. Brown, supra, in fact decided two points—(1) that the agent did not act in time on the authority dispatched in time; (2) that the principal could not, after the end of the transit, ratify another stoppage made in time, but unauthorised when made.

(n) "Buyer," by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62(1), includes one who agrees to buy; see p. 118, ante. The case in which the property in the goods has not passed to the seller himself at the time when he exercises his rights perhaps falls under this clause rather than under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38(2); see p. 241, ante.

Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co.*, [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A. (right of disposal reserved: quasi-right of stoppage). As the right here given is "similar to and co-extensive with" the rights of lien and stoppage in transitu, the right of withholding delivery arises under this clause if the price is due and unpaid, or if the buyer become insolvent; see pp. 242, 247, ante.

any sale or other disposition of the goods which the buyer may have made (t), unless the seller has assented thereto (a).

An assent to a disposition by the buyer is not a mere acknowledgment of the fact of the disposition (b). The seller is said to assent where, by his words or conduct, he expressly or by implication represents to the buyer's disponent that the goods will be deliverable to him free from the seller's rights as unpaid seller (b).

Such an assent may be given by the seller prospectively, as, for example, where, previously to the buyer's disposition, the seller issues to the buyer a document, intended to pass from hand to hand, and to be acted on, which, by its terms, or by usage of trade, or otherwise, contains a representation such as is above mentioned (c).

An assent given to the buyer's disponent at a time when the buyer is entitled to the possession of the goods is not revocable as against the disponent by reason of the buyer's subsequent default in payment or insolvency (d).

Davey*, [1891] 3 Ch. 540 (mere acknowledgment of sub-sale). An assent is immaterial, save in so far as it affects some matter with regard to which there is power to dissent. A seller can dissent to the waiver of his rights, but not to the mere fact of the buyer's disposition. Where the goods are specific, the presentation by the sub-buyer to the original seller of a delivery order, and the seller's entry in his books of the sub-buyer's name, may justify the inference that the seller has attorned to the sub-buyer; secus, where the goods are unascertained (Mordaunt Brothers v. Bolekow, Vaughan & Co. (1875), 10 Ch. App. 491; Farmeloe v. Bain (1876), 1 C. P. D. 445; and Dixon v. Bovill, supra, in all of which cases there were mere engagements to deliver, and no representation of any fact by the unpaid seller.

(e) This expression has the same meaning as in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45) (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1)); see p. 119, ante. It must be remembered that, in cases of lien, the proviso to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47, has no application where a bill of lading (which divests lien) is transferred to the buyer or owner.

Olive* (1805), cited in Abbott on Shipping, 14th ed., p. 351, a bill of lading was sent, but not transferred, to the buyer, and it was held that the sub-buyer acquired no title.

(h) By the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (6), the word "person" includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate.

(i) The word "buyer" includes one who agrees to buy (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 62 (1); Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.). Where, however, the property has not passed to the buyer, the seller exercises, not a lien or right of stoppage in the strict sense, but a right of withholding delivery under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 39 (2); see p. 258, ante. The word "owner" may be intended to cover a case where an agent being a person "in the position of a seller" under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 38 (2) (see p. 241, ante), transfers a document of title to his principal.

(k) See p. 120, ante. The rule stated in the text protects an ultimate indorsee in good faith after several intermediate transfers (Gurney v. Behrend (1854), 3 E. & B. 622).

(l) At common law these words included an antecedent debt (Leask v. Scott (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 376, C. A., dissenting from Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (1869), L. R. 2 P. C. 393; The Emilien Marie (1875), 2 Asp. M. L. C. 514; 44 L. J. (ADM.) 9), as an understanding at least generally exists that time shall be given (Glegg v. Bromley, [1912] 3 K. B. 474, C. A. (where the law as to assignments for antecedent debts is considered)); but no valuable consideration is given if the facts negative such an understanding (Wigan v. English and Scottish Law Life Assurance Association, [1909] 1 Ch. 291 (where the transferee was not aware of the transfer)); see also the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 5, which defines the consideration for a disposition "in pursuance of the Act," and includes "any valuable consideration"; see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 206.

(m) Re Westzinthus (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 817; Spalding v. Ruding (1843), 6 Beav. 376; affirmed on appeal (1846), 15 L. J. (CH.) 374; Coventry v. Gladstone (1868), L. R. 8 Eq. 44; Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573. See the definition of "pledge" in the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (5); and see note (b), p. 201, ante. In the case of a pledge in exchange for other goods, documents of title, or negotiable securities, the right of the pledgee is limited to the value of the goods given in exchange (Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 5); see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 206.

(n) As to the meaning of "disposition," see note (b), p. 201, ante. By the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 5, the consideration for a sale, pledge, or other disposition "in pursuance of the Act," may be an exchange. A transfer by the buyer to his factor merely to enable him to receive a cargo was held in Patten v. Thompson (1816), 5 M. & S. 350, not to be a disposition for value.

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47 (proviso), substantially identical with the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 10, which is again substantially identical with the Factors Act, 1877 (40 & 41

A document of title is lawfully transferred when it is transferred according to its tenor, and with the consent in fact of a transferor entitled to transfer it (p).

457. The unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transitu may be wholly, or, as the case may be, partially, defeated by a disposition by the buyer of a document of title to any person receiving the same in good faith and without notice of any lien or other right of the original seller in respect of the goods (q).

The mere fact that a disponent of the goods knows that the goods have not been paid for is not inconsistent with good faith on Transfer by buyer of document of title to transferee in good faith and without notice.

Vict. c. 39), s. 5 (now repealed). With regard to stoppage in transitu, it adopts the rule of the common law declared in Lickbarrow v. Mason (1793), 6 East, 21, n., H. L.; 1 Smith, L. C., 11th ed., p. 693 (see also Pease v. Gloaghe, The "Marie Joseph" (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 219; The Argentina (1867), L. R. 1 A. & E. 370), and extends it so as to make it applicable to the transfer by the buyer of documents of title other than bills of lading. With regard to lien, it applies the same extended rule, a lien not being lost at common law, as against a buyer or sub-buyer, or other transferee, by the issue or transfer of any document but a bill of lading, that being the only document which per se transferred possession. Some difficulty arises in the interpretation of the words "subject to the rights of the transferee" in the case of a pledge by the buyer or owner of a document of title for an antecedent debt. There are no words in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47, assimilating the position of the buyer or owner to that of a mercantile agent under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), and it might therefore be argued that the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 4, is not to be read into the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47. The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 4, limits the right of the pledgee for an antecedent debt to "the right to the goods which could have been enforced by the pledgor at the time of the pledge," and so seems to render that right subject to the seller's right of lien or stoppage in transitu, if then existing. On the other hand, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47, makes these rights of the seller subject to the rights of the pledgee. The two enactments should probably be reconciled by reading "subject to the rights of the transferee" as meaning his rights under the contract of pledge as modified by the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 4. In other words, ibid., s. 4, should be considered as a second proviso to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 47.

(p) Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.; The Argentina (1867), L. R. 1 A. & E. 370. As to the mode of transfer "for the purposes of the Act," see Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 11; p. 200, ante; and as to consent, see p. 202, ante.

(q) Under and subject to the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9 (Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., supra (stoppage in transitu wholly defeated)); see note (i), p. 202, ante. The Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9, is, from the nature of the case, not applicable where the buyer obtains possession of the goods themselves, except where some special right by agreement, and analogous to lien, is conferred on the seller, as in Dodsley v. Varley (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 632. There is no decided authority for the proposition that the seller's right of stoppage in transitu may be partially defeated under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9; but stoppage in transitu falls within the words "other right of the original seller" (ibid.), and pledge is one of the dispositions authorised, which the seller must be taken to have consented to pro tanto only. Where the pledge of the document of title by the buyer is for an antecedent debt, the effect of the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 4, which, it is conceived, should be read with ibid., s. 9, is to make the rights of the pledgee subject to the seller's right of lien or of stoppage; see note (o), p. 260, ante.

his part (r); nor does it of itself show that the disponent had notice of a right of lien or stoppage in transitu of the original seller (s).

Upon a transfer of a document of title by way of pledge, the pledgee is entitled, as against the unpaid seller, to be paid only the sum for which the instrument was specifically pledged, and not also the amount of a general balance of account against the pledgor (t). The unpaid seller is entitled to require the pledgee to satisfy his claim against the buyer first out of any goods or securities in the hands of the pledgee and available against the buyer (a).

When the unpaid seller's right of stoppage in transitu as regards the goods has been defeated by a transfer by the buyer of a document of title to a sub-buyer, it is doubtful whether the seller, if he gives such a notice of stoppage in transitu as would, but for the sub-sale, be effectual, is equitably entitled to so much of the sub-buyer's unpaid purchase-money as will satisfy the seller's claim against the buyer (b).

Exercise of seller's rights, no rescission.

458. Subject to certain statutory provisions (c), a contract of sale is not rescinded (d) by the mere exercise (e) by an unpaid seller (f) of his right of lien or stoppage in transitu (g).

(r) Cuming v. Brown (1808), 9 East, 506; Pease v. Gloahec, The "Marie Joseph" (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 219; compare Salomons v. Nissen (1788), 2 Term Rep. 674 (where the assignee agreed with the buyer to pay for the goods, and did not do so); see also definition of "good faith," p. 120, ante.

(s) Under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9: for notice that the goods have not been paid for is not necessarily notice that the price is due, or that the buyer is insolvent.

(t) Spalding v. Ruding (1843), 6 Beav. 376; affirmed on appeal (1846), 15 L. J. (CH.) 374. The unpaid seller is entitled in equity "to stop in transitu everything which is not covered by the pledge" (Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 582).

(a) Re Westzinthus (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 817. The unpaid seller is in effect, by means of his goods, a surety to the disponent for the buyer (ibid.); see also Re Holland, Ex parte Alston (1868), 4 Ch. App. 168 (consignment to factor); Re Stratton, Ex parte Salting (1883), 25 Ch. D. 148, C. A.

A.; but see, contra, Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573, per Lord SELBORNE at p. 577; and see Berndtson v. Strang (1868), 3 Ch. App. 588, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C. It is submitted that, according to Lord SELBORNE's opinion, the right of stoppage is one against the goods only; and that, as a sub-buyer, being the transferee of a document of title, takes the goods free from the right of stoppage, which is "defeated," there should be no right to intercept his unpaid purchase-money. On the other hand, where the right has not been defeated, it may well be given effect to by the sub-buyer's purchase-money being paid to the seller to the extent of his claim.

460. The seller, even where the property has passed, is entitled to treat the contract of sale as rescinded, and to resell the goods as an owner thereof, but without prejudice to his right to damages in respect of any loss caused to him by the buyer's default, when the buyer, by his words or conduct, repudiates the contract (i). In particular, the seller may resell the goods when the buyer becomes insolvent, and expressly or by implication intimates his insolvency to the seller in circumstances showing that he is unwilling or unable to pay the price of the goods (h).

or insolvent (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 41 (1); see p. 242, ante); or, in case of stoppage in transitu, that he is insolvent, and the goods have been stopped (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 44; see p. 247, ante). "It is only after the breach of the obligation to pay that the lien attaches" (The Eider, [1893] P. 119, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 132). See also *Boorman v. The reason is that the buyer, being in default, is not entitled to the possession, and so cannot bring trover. See also Adelphi Bank v. Halifax Sugar Refining Co. (1887), 4 T. L. R. 21, C. A. (pledge of bill of lading by unpaid seller). It is noticeable that the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (2), does not in terms require good faith and absence of notice on the part of the second buyer, both of which are necessary if the seller resells under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8; see p. 199, ante. On the other hand, the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 8, does not require the first buyer to be in default.

(i) On general principles (Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor, Benzon & Co., supra; Bloomer v. Bernstein (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 588). This is not a rescission in the sense of a rescission by agreement, but one sub modo, at the option of the seller only, who has "the option to treat the repudiation of the contract as a definitive breach of it and thereupon to treat the contract as rescinded except for the purpose of his bringing an action for breach of it" (Michael v. Hart & Co., [1902] 1 K. B. 482, C. A., per COLLINS, M.R., at p. 490; Johnstone v. Milling (1886), 16 Q. B. D. 460, C. Statutory resale.

461. Where the goods are of a perishable nature (l), or where the unpaid seller (m) gives notice to the buyer of his intention to resell (n), and the buyer does not within a reasonable time (o) pay or tender the price, the unpaid seller may resell the goods and recover from the original buyer damages for any loss occasioned by his breach of contract (p).

Whether the unpaid seller under the foregoing provision resells the goods in the capacity of an owner, so as to be entitled to any profit which may be realised by the resale, or whether he resells the goods in a capacity analogous to that of a pledgee, or in any other limited capacity, is doubtful (q).

by the law in spite of the agreement of the parties (Re Phoenix Bessemer Steel Co., Ex parte Carnforth Hæmatite Iron Co. (1876), 4 Ch. D. 108, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at pp. 112, 113). But if the seller elects to abide by the contract he must perform it according to its terms, including the allowance of credit (Morgan v. Bain (1874), L. R. 10 C. P. 15, per BRETT, J., at p. 27).

(l) Not only physically, but commercially perishable, as by deteriorating in market value by delay (Maclean v. Dunn (1828), 4 Bing. 722, 728); or by deteriorating in quality so as to become unmerchantable; see Asfar & Co. v. Blundell, [1896] 1 Q. B. 123, C. A.; Duthie v. Hilton (1868), L. R. 4 C. P. 138 (freight not earned); Sharp v. Christmas (1892), 8 T. L. R. 687, C. A. (potatoes).

(m) For the definition of "unpaid seller," see p. 239, ante.

(n) A request by the seller to the buyer, after a delivery and rejection of the goods, to resell them for the seller is evidence of a mutual rescission of the contract (Gomery v. Bond (1815), 3 M. & S. 378).

(o) What is "a reasonable time" is a question of fact (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 56).

(q) The inference from a comparison of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (3), with ibid., s. 48 (4), is that a resale under s. 48 (3) does not rescind the contract. But the buyer's default under ibid., s. 48 (3), is a default "down to the last moment which the law gives" (Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch. D. 89, C. A., per FRY, L.J., at p. 105), and so hardly to be distinguished from a repudiation by the buyer. Moreover, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (3), does not say that the seller may, after resale, recover any balance of the price unsatisfied, but damages only, a right which generally presupposes that the property is in the seller, i.e., has been revested (McEntire v. Crossley Brothers, [1895] A. C. 457, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at p. 465). Again, the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37 (see p. 232, ante), justifies a resale by the seller as owner where the buyer's default in taking delivery after notice is a repudiation, a hardly distinguishable case. It is therefore submitted that the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (3), re-enacts the common law. Further, it is believed that the common law cases show that an unpaid seller had no right of resale except on the buyer's repudiation. See and consider Hore v. Milner (1797), Peake, 58 [42], n.; Chinery v. Viall (1860), 5 H. & N. 288; Maclean v. Dunn, supra, at p. 728 (seller cannot sue for price after resale); Howe v.

462. Where the seller expressly (r) reserves a right of resale in case the buyer should make default (s) and, on the buyer making default (s), resells the goods, the original contract of sale is thereby rescinded, but without prejudice to any claim which the seller may have for damages (t). Accordingly, the seller is entitled to any profits resulting from the resale (a).

In calculating the loss by the buyer's default the seller must take into account any deposit on the price which may have been paid by the buyer (b).

Conversely, where, pursuant to an express power in that behalf exercisable on the seller's default in delivery, the buyer buys similar goods from a third person, the contract is rescinded, and the buyer is entitled to any profits on the repurchase (c).

463. A retaking of the goods by the seller after delivery operates as a rescission of the contract, so that, unless it has been otherwise agreed, the price, although it may then be due, is thereafter not recoverable by the seller, and must, if paid, be returned by him, where the goods are retaken under an express power exercisable on the buyer's default (d), or, it is submitted, where they are retaken

(r) The same result as in the rule stated in the text occurs where a power of resale is given by usage of trade (Re Tate, Ex parte Moffatt (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 170), and the damages, being ascertainable, constitute a provable debt in bankruptcy (ibid.).

The result of the resale is that the buyer is no longer liable for the price as such, the resale being made by the seller as an owner, and not as the buyer's agent (ibid.). The rescission spoken of in the text is a rescission sub modo, i.e., at the option of the party not in fault, and subject only to his right to damages. The damages are the same as under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 48 (3); see note (p), p. 264, ante.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Action for the Price.

Where property has passed.

464. Where, under a contract of sale (f), the property (g) in the goods has passed to the buyer, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay for the goods according to the terms of the contract, the seller may maintain an action (h) against him for the price of the goods (i).

option only of purchase, the rule is different; the contract is rescinded for the future only, and arrears of rent are recoverable (Brooks v. Beirnsstein, [1909] 1 K. B. 98), existing rights being respected; see Stubbs v. Holywell Rail. Co. (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 311. The buyer's licence to the seller to enter his premises to retake the goods is irrevocable (Heath v. Randall (1849), 58 Massachusetts Reports, 195). A mere notice by the seller of his intention to resume possession is not a rescission of the contract, at any rate as against the right of distress of the buyer's lessor (Hackney Furnishing Co. v. Watts, [1912] 3 K. B. 225, overruling London Furnishing Co. v. Solomon (1912), 28 T. L. R. 265).

(e) See the reasoning of the court in Stephens v. Wilkinson (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 320, and Brooks v. Beirnsstein, supra. Where the property in the goods has passed, the buyer has received the consideration for the sale, and the seller's conduct is accordingly only an independent tort, and cannot be treated by the buyer as a rescission (Stephens v. Wilkinson, supra; Gillard v. Brittan (1841), 8 M. & W. 575; Re Humberston (1846), De G. 262; Page v. Cowasjee Eduljee (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 127). But the buyer can of course counterclaim for the tort in the seller's action for the price; see title SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, p. 507, post.

As to interest on the price, see p. 238, ante. The statement in title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 303, that interest is allowable as damages on non-payment of money must be taken to refer to cases where interest is agreed to be paid, or is otherwise payable by law; see title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., pp. 37 et seq. The neglect or refusal to pay must be wrongful. Prima facie payment of the price and delivery of the goods are concurrent conditions (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 28; see p. 204, ante), but the parties may make any bargain they please as to priority of delivery or payment (Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Co. v. De Mattos (1863), 32 L. J. (Q. B.) 322, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 328); so that, if delivery is not a condition precedent to payment of the price, the price is recoverable, if it is otherwise due, without delivery. On the other hand, the buyer may, by the terms of the contract, be entitled to credit. Credit allowed, but not as a term of the contract, is of course

465. Where, under a contract of sale, the price is payable on a day certain irrespective of delivery, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may maintain an action for the price, although the property in the goods has not passed, and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract (k).

revocable (De Symons v. Minchwick (1795), 1 Esp. 430). When the property has passed and the price is payable, it becomes payable as an ordinary debt (Martindale v. Smith (1841), 1 Q. B. 389). If the property has not passed, in the absence of express stipulation as to prepayment of the price, the seller's only remedy is an action for damages under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50; see the text, infra. This was the common law rule (Atkinson v. Bell (1828), 8 B. & C. 277; Boswell v. Kilborn (1862), 15 Moo. P. C. C. 309). As to the seller's right to recover for the care and custody of the goods, and for loss caused by the buyer's delay in taking delivery, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37, which, semble, applies only where the property has passed; see p. 232, ante.

The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2), applies to instalments of the price (Workman, Clark & Co., Ltd. v. Lloyd Brazileño, [1908] 1 K. B. 968, C. A.).

(m) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (1). The neglect or refusal must be wrongful (ibid.). There may be conditions precedent (see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 434 et seq.) to be performed by the seller, and the action does not lie if he has failed to perform them (see, e.g., Graves v. Legg (1854), 9 Exch. 709 (names of ships to be declared on shipment of goods)), unless they have been waived by the buyer, as in Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 543, C. A. As to damages for default in taking delivery, where the property has passed, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 37; p. 232, ante. Subject to the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 49 (2) (see the text, supra), if the property in the goods has not passed, the seller's only remedy is by action under ibid., s. 50 (Boswell v. Kilborn, supra). If the property has passed, the seller, it seems, may sue, either for the price or under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50, in which latter case his conduct amounts to an election to treat the buyer's conduct as a repudiation of the contract.

The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (2), adopts the first part of the rule laid down for breaches of contract generally in Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341, 354, and defines only what are called ordinary or general damages. The most common application of it is given by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (3); see p. 268, post. As to special damages, see Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 54; p. 277, post. As to damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 301 et seq.

(q) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (3); Maclean v. Dunn (1828), 4 Bing. 722 (auction sale); Boorman v. Nash (1829), 9 B. & C. 145 (tender of instalments at fixed date: bankruptcy of buyer); Phillpotts v. Evans (1839), 5 M. & W. 475 (tender at fixed date: buyer's previous repudiation); Boswell v. Kilborn (1862), 15 Moo. P. C. C. 309; Re Nathan, Ex parte Stapleton (1879), 10 Ch. D. 586, C. A.; Ginner v. King (1890), 7 T. L. R. 140, C. A. (damages at date of buyer's refusal); Tredegar Iron and Coal Co. v. Hawthorn Brothers & Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 716, C. A. (buyer's previous repudiation); Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 543, C. A.; and see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 335. These damages do not constitute a debt (Green v. Bicknell (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 701). If there is no difference between the contract and market price, the damages are nominal (Prehn v. Royal Bank of Liverpool (1870), L. R. 5 Exch. 92, per MARTIN, B., at p. 99). But there are many cases where the rule as to the market price at the date of delivery is not applicable. For example, there may be no market or current price for the goods in question, or the contract may have been repudiated by the buyer before the time fixed for acceptance, and even before the goods were manufactured, or produced, or procured. In those cases resort must be had to the general rule laid down by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 50 (2); see, e.g., Cort v. Ambergate, Nottingham and Boston and Eastern Junction Rail. Co. (1851), 17 Q. B. 127 (contract repudiated before the whole of the goods manufactured); Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co. (1886), 121 United States Reports, 264 (same: cost of production and delivery); Silkstone and Dodsworth Coal and Iron Co. v. Joint Stock Coal Co. (1877), 35 L. T. 668 (perishable coal, part not raised when acceptance refused: cost of production); compare Tredegar Coal and Iron Co. v. Gielgud (1883), Cab. & El. 27, where there was some evidence of a market. Ordinarily this general rule is satisfied by ascertaining the difference between the value of the goods and the contract price at the time of breach, and, if there has been a resale by the seller, the resale price is taken as evidence of the value (Ellis, Lever & Co. v. Dunkirk Colliery Co. (1880), 43 L. T. 706, H. L.; Stroud v. Austin & Co. (1883), Cab. & El. 119). The buyer who gives notice of his intention not to accept the goods, before the time for acceptance has arrived, cannot diminish the damages on the ground that the seller is bound to accept the repudiation as a breach (Frost v. Knight (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 111, 113, Ex. Ch., explaining Phillpotts v. Evans, supra, and Ripley v. M'Clure (1849), 4 Exch. 345); see also Roper v. Johnson (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 167; and see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 335. The seller may hold him to his contract and wait for the appointed time of performance (Michael v. Hart & Co., [1902] 1 K. B. 482, C. A.; Tredegar Iron and Coal Co. v. Hawthorn Brothers & Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 716, C. A.). On the other hand, the seller may accept the repudiation as an immediate breach (see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 438), and the damages are then measured as on the date of the seller's acceptance of the repudiation (Shaw's Brow Iron Co. v. Birchgrove Steel Co. (1889), 6 T. L. R. 50, C. A., affirmed (1891), 7 T. L. R. 246, H. L.; Tredegar Iron and Coal Co. v. Hawthorn Brothers & Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 716, C. A.). It is submitted that the tendency of modern cases is to modify the hard-and-fast rule of Frost v. Knight (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 111, that damages must be measured with reference to the original date of performance; see note (h), p. 271, post; Roth & Co. v. Taysen, Townsend & Co. (1896), 1 Com. Cas. 306, C. A.; compare British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. of London, Ltd., [1912] A. C. 673.

(t) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (1); Jones v. Gibbons (1853), 8 Exch. 920 (goods to be delivered as required); Lewis v. Clifton (1854), 14 C. B. 245 (growing timber to be removed by buyer: independent trespass by buyer no defence). The neglect or refusal must be wrongful, i.e., in breach of the contract (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (1)). The buyer has three remedies in case of wrongful non-delivery, namely, (1) in all cases an action for damages; (2) if the goods are specific or ascertained, a right to specific performance under ibid., s. 52 (see p. 272, post); and (3) if the property has passed, the ordinary remedies of an owner, such as detinue and trover (see p. 273, post).

(u) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (2); and, as to damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 301 et seq. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (2), merely applies to the case of non-delivery the first part of the general rule of damages for breach of contract laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341, 354; see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 313. As the contract, if duly performed by the seller, would give to the buyer goods which at the time and place of delivery would be of a certain value, it is obvious that, if the goods are not delivered, the buyer loses this value. On the other hand, the buyer agrees to pay a price in return. The loss, therefore, which directly and naturally results to the buyer in the ordinary course of events is the value of the goods at the time and place of delivery diminished by the price which the buyer binds himself to pay (Rodocanachi v. Milburn (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 67, C. A.); in other words, the difference between the contract price and the value of the goods exclusive of circumstances "accidental" to the buyer (ibid., at p. 77). This value, if there is a market, is presumed to be the market price (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (3)), that is to say, the price which the buyer can get for the goods in the market, or which, if he buys similar goods to supply the place of the goods undelivered, he has to pay for the substituted goods; see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 333. Such being the rule, the price at which the buyer, in anticipation of delivery, has resold the goods is an immaterial factor in the case (Williams v. Reynolds (1865), 6 B. & S. 495; Wertheim v. Chicoutimi Pulp Co., [1911] A. C. 301, 307, P. C.; Re Williams Brothers and Agius (E. T.), Ltd. (1913), 135 L. T. Jo. 34, C. A.), except where, there being no market, the resale price is evidence of the value of the goods contracted for, or where profits may be claimed as special damages (ibid.). Principles similar to those above stated apply where delivery is merely delayed. See the rationale of the rule of damages explained in Wertheim v. Chicoutimi Pulp Co., supra; and, in illustration, Stroud v. Austin & Co. (1883), Cab. & El. 119 (no market: resale price evidence of value); Portman v. Middleton (1858), 4 C. B. (N. S.) 322; Hinde v. Liddell (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 265 (excess of price paid by buyer for

delivery.

470. Where there is an available market (v) for the goods in question the measure of damages is primâ facie to be ascertained by the difference (w) between the contract price and the market or current price of the goods at the time or times (a) when they ought to have been delivered, or, if no time was fixed, at the time of refusal to deliver (b).

471. Where the seller delivers the goods at a time later than the contract time, and the buyer accepts the goods, the measure of damages is primâ facie the difference between the value which the goods would have had at the place of delivery if they had been substituted goods); Erie County Natural Gas and Fuel Co. v. Carroll, [1911] A. C. 105, 117, P. C. (value of substituted goods).

(v) As to what constitutes an "available market," see Dunkirk Colliery Co. v. Lever (1878), 9 Ch. D. 20, C. A. "It is immaterial whether the rise in price is occasioned by scarcity, or increased demand, or any other cause" (Josling v. Irvine (1861), 6 H. & N. 512, per WILDE, B., at p. 517). In this case the seller sold an article which proved of much greater value than the parties were aware of at the time of the sale. As to damages where there is no market, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 333, 334. Where there is no market at the place of delivery, the value at the nearest available place, less the cost of transport thither, may sometimes be taken as the market value (Wertheim v. Chicoutimi Pulp Co., [1911] A. C. 301, P. C.; Grand Tower Co. v. Phillips (1874), 90 United States Reports, 471); as may also the value in controlling markets (Cahen v. Platt (1877), 69 New York State Reports, 348, 352). If there is no market price at the place of delivery at the time when the goods should have been delivered, the price for a brief period before or after that time may be shown (ibid.).

(w) If there is no difference the damages are nominal (Valpy v. Oakeley (1851), 16 Q. B. 941; Griffiths v. Perry (1859), 1 E. & E. 680).

(a) Where the time of delivery is indefinite, and within the control of the seller, it would seem that the buyer, being induced by the seller to believe that a breach has not occurred, may treat the date of his discovery of the breach as the date of the breach (Wilson v. London and Globe Finance Corporation, Ltd. (1897), 14 T. L. R. 15, C. A.). In the case of instalment contracts the damages must primâ facie be calculated with reference to the market price at the time for the delivery of each instalment (Brown v. Muller (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 319; Roper v. Johnson (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 167). As to indeterminate instalments, see Barningham v. Smith (1874), 31 L. T. 540; Bergheim v. Blaenarvon Iron Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 319. The buyer cannot accumulate successive breaches, and treat them as a single breach at the end of the contract period (Barningham v. Smith, supra). As to postponement of delivery, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 334; Re Voss, Ex parte Llansamlet Tinplate Co. (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 155.

(b) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (3); Leigh v. Paterson (1818), 8 Taunt. 540 (previous repudiation not accepted by buyer); followed in Gainsford v. Carroll (1824), 2 B. & C. 624; Barrow v. Arnaud (1846), 8 Q. B. 595, 609, Ex. Ch.; Peterson v. Ayre (1853), 13 C. B. 353 (special damages excluded by existence of market); Shaw v. Holland (1846), 15 M. & W. 136, 146 (shares); Josling v. Irvine, supra (market price unusually high); Williams v. Reynolds (1865), 6 B. & S. 495; Ashmore & Son v. Cox (C. S.) & Co., [1899] 1 Q. B. 436, 443 (date of repudiation accepted is date of breach); Kidston & Co. v. Monceau St. Fiacre Ironworks Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 320 (date of refusal to deliver: date of breach); Wertheim v. Chicoutimi Pulp Co., supra (delay in delivery); see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 333. If the goods are to be removed at the buyer's expense, in calculating the difference the expenses of removal must be added to the contract price (M'Neill v. Richards, [1899] 1 I. R. 79). As to parol evidence to enhance the measure of damages under a written contract, see Brady v. Oastler (1864), 3 H. & C. 112. In Scotland the rule was formerly not so strictly applied, and more latitude in considering actual loss was allowed (Dunlop v. Higgins (1848), delivered in due time and the value which they had at that place when they were delivered (c).

472. The above-mentioned rule for the calculation of damages by the market price at the date of delivery (d) is inapplicable, and damages for non-delivery are measured under other provisions (e), where—

- (1) The contract itself has fixed the damages (f) ;
- (2) The price has been prepaid (g) ;
- (3) The seller has repudiated the contract before the time fixed for delivery, and the buyer has accepted the repudiation as an immediate breach (h) ;

As to the distinction between liquidated damages and a penalty, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 328 et seq.

Cortazzi* (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 165 (market price plus interest on money)). But the measure must vary according to the facts. In some of the American States the value of the goods must be taken at the highest price between the date fixed for delivery and the trial (Clark v. Pinney (1827), 7 Cowen's Reports, 681 (where the cases are considered); West v. Pritchard (1848), 19 Connecticut State Reports, 212).

C. 105, 117, P. C. The buyer may elect to hold to the contract until the time for performance comes, or may accept the repudiation as an immediate breach, in which case damages are measured at the date of the acceptance of the repudiation (Tredegar Iron and Coal Co. v. Hawthorn Brothers & Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 716, C. A.; see note (q), p. 268, ante). If the buyer accepts the repudiation he must act reasonably, and not lie by to enhance the damages (Nickoll and Knight v. Ashton, Edridge & Co., [1900] 2 Q. B. 298; Wilson v. Hicks (1857), 26 L. J. (Ex.) 242 (charterparty); and see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 335); and opinions have been expressed that, if it is apparent that it will be impossible for the seller to deliver, the buyer must accept the repudiation and do his best to mitigate the damages (Nickoll and Knight v. Ashton, Edridge & Co., supra, per MATHEW, J., at p. 305; S. C., [1901] 2 K. B.

SECT. 2.
Remedies of the Buyer.

(4) There is no market for the goods in question at the time and place of delivery (i);

(5) The seller has delivered the goods, but later than the contract time (j); or

(6) The time for delivery has been voluntarily extended by the buyer at the seller's request (k).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Specific Performance.

Discretion of the court—scope of judgment.

473. In any action (l) for breach of contract to deliver (m) specific (n) or ascertained goods the court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the plaintiff (o), by its judgment direct that the contract shall be performed specifically, without giving the defendant the option of retaining the goods on payment of damages. The judgment may be unconditional, or upon such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price, and otherwise, as to the court may seem just, and the application by the plaintiff (o) may be made at any time before judgment (p).

(i) In this case the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (2), applies, and the damages are the difference between the contract price and the value of the goods at the time and place for delivery (Elbinger Actien-Gesellschaft v. Armstrong (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 473, 476; France v. Gaudet (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 199 (trover: resale price as value); Hinde v. Liddell (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 265; M'Neill v. Richards, [1899] 1 I. R. 79 (probable resale price); Josling v. Irvine (1861), 6 H. & N. 512); see p. 269, ante. If goods of the description contracted for are not obtainable, the value may be measured by the cost of the best substitute procurable (Hinde v. Liddell, supra (superior shirtings); Erie County Natural Gas and Fuel Co. v. Carroll, [1911] A. C. 105, P. C.). The principle applies to all contracts (Le Blanche v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1876), 1 C. P. D. 286, C. A. (carrier)). The selling value to the buyer of the goods procured is immaterial (Erie County Natural Gas and Fuel Co. v. Carroll, supra; Hinde v. Liddell, supra). If the buyer has procured the substituted goods without loss, his damages are nominal (ibid.).

(k) Damages in such case for the breach of the contract at the contract time are to be measured at the expiration of the extended time, or, if no specific time was mentioned, at the expiration of a reasonable time after the last request of the seller for postponement, so as to give the buyer the benefit of a rising market (Ogle v. Vane (Earl) (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 272, Ex. Ch.; distinguished in Re Voss, Ex parte Llansamlet Tin Plate Co. (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 155 (no request by seller for postponement: ordinary rule); Hickman v. Haynes (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 598; Wilson v. London and Globe Finance Corporation, Ltd. (1897), 14 T. L. R. 15, C. A. (shares)). Where the extension of time is not voluntary, but under a new contract, the prima facie rule in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 51 (3), in terms applies. All the cases above mentioned were cases in which the market price had risen at the extended time. It is submitted that the seller may take advantage of the fact that the market has fallen.

(m) The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 2 (now repealed), contained the words "for a price in money," but no change is intended.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Action in Tort.

SECT. 2.

Remedies of the Buyer.

Buyer's right to bring detinue or trover.

474. Where the property in goods has passed to the buyer, and he is entitled to delivery, he may, instead of suing for damages for non-delivery, maintain an action against the seller for the detention or conversion of the goods (q); but he cannot, by bringing his action in tort, obtain higher damages against the seller than he would have recovered by suing in contract (r).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Breach of Warranty.

475. Where there is a breach of warranty (s) by the seller, or where the buyer elects, or is compelled, to treat any breach of a condition on the part of the seller as a breach of warranty (t), the buyer is not by reason only (u) of such breach of warranty entitled to reject the goods (v); but he may set up against the seller the breach of warranty in diminution or extinction of the price (w) or maintain an action (a) against the seller for damages for breach of warranty (b).

In actions against strangers the buyer can recover the full value of the goods without deduction of the unpaid price (Johnson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co., supra; France v. Gaudet (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 199), even where he is not the owner, but only the bailee under a contract of sale; but in this case he is a trustee for the seller for the unpaid purchase-money (*Turner v. R. 7 Exch. 7; Foster v. Smith (1856), 18 C. Again, the contract itself may in its inception be founded on the fulfilment of a condition assumed as the basis of the contract (Bannerman v. White (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 844). As to conditions and warranties generally, see pp. 149 et seq., ante.

The fact that the buyer has set up the breach of warranty in diminution or extinction of the price does not prevent him from maintaining an action for the same breach of warranty if he has suffered further damage (c).

damages.

476. The measure of damages for breach of warranty is the estimated loss directly and naturally resulting in the ordinary course of events from the breach of warranty (d).

(w) Street v. Blay (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 456; Allen v. Cameron (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 832; Cousins v. Paddon (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 547 (reduction); Poulton v. Lattimore (1829), 9 B. & C. 259 (extinction); King v. Boston (1789), 7 East, 481, n. (extinction); Grounsell v. Lamb (1836), 1 M. & W. 352 (express agreement: extinction); Dicken v. Neale (1836), 1 M. & W. 556 (reduced value paid). The rule here adopted was first definitely formulated in Basten v. Butter (1806), 7 East, 479. If, however, the buyer wrongfully rejects the goods and repudiates the contract, and so waives the performance of conditions precedent, he cannot set up in reduction of the damages a breach of warranty of quality or description when sued for non-acceptance (Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 543, 552, C. A.); and the buyer cannot show a mere breach of warranty as a defence pro tanto to a negotiable instrument given for the price (Tye v. Gwynne (1809), 2 Camp. 346; Trickey v. Larne (1840), 6 M. & W. 278; Warwick v. Nairn (1855), 10 Exch. 762); but he may show a total failure of consideration (Wells v. Hopkins (1839), 5 M. & W. 7). But since the Judicature Acts (see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 51, note (g)) a breach of warranty may be set up by way of counterclaim to an action on the instrument; and see title SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, pp. 504 et seq., post.

(b) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (1). For the statutory definition of "warranty," see p. 122, ante. The action formerly could be framed not only in contract, but in tort, and without averring a scienter, or proving it, if averred (Williamson v. Allison (1802), 2 East, 446; Wood v. Smith (1829), 5 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 124; Brown v. Edgington (1841), 2 Man. & G. 279); but see Rowe Brothers, Ltd. v. Crossley Brothers (No. 1) (1912), 57 Sol. Jo. 144, C. A. (express warranty: action lies in contract, not in tort, for negligence). The right of action is not excluded by a provision in the contract that the buyer shall pay in cash after inspection of the goods on arrival (Khan v. Duché (1905), 10 Com. Cas. 87).

(c) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (4); Mondel v. Steel (1841), 8 M. & W. 858; Rigge v. Burbidge (1846), 15 M. & W. 598. Before the Judicature Acts (see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 51, note (g)) it was held that, when a breach of warranty was pleaded as a defence to an action for the price, a diminution or extinction of the price was limited to the difference between the actual value of the goods and their value as warranted, and that a cross-action only would lie in respect of special or consequential damages not satisfied by the diminution or extinction of the price (Mondel v. Steel, supra; Rigge v. Burbidge, supra). But now that defence and counterclaim can be pleaded together, this point becomes of little importance; see title SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, p. 508, post. The buyer, if sued by the seller, is not bound to set up the breach of warranty as a defence in the buyer's action, but may bring a cross-action (Davis v. Hedges (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 687, disapproving Fisher v. Samuda (1808), 1 Camp. 190). In the result the buyer may divide his cause of action, or may keep it entire and sue for his whole damage (Davis v. Hedges, supra, at p. 692).

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (2). As to damages generally, see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 301 et seq. This provision applies to breach of warranty the rule of ordinary damages for breach of contract, being the first branch of the rule laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341; see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., p. 310. "The rule so laid down excludes the element of the defendant's knowledge; his liability is to depend, not upon the state of his mind, but upon the facts of the case" (Bostock & Co., Ltd. v. Nicholson & Sons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K. B. 725, per BRUCE, J., at p. 736). The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (2), therefore, does not contemplate special circumstances in the purview of the parties, i.e., special damages under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 54. See Lewis v. Peake (1816), 7 Taunt. 153 (costs recovered by sub-buyer), as explained in Walker v. Hatton (1842), 10 M. & W. 249; Borradaile v. Brunton (1818), 8 Taunt. 535 (cable warranted: loss of anchor); Randall v. Raper (1858), E. B. & E. 84 (seed barley: difference in crop); Wagstaff v. Johnson (1899), 15 T. L. R. 179 (defective mortar: cost of pulling down and rebuilding house condemned); Davis v. Miller (1894), 10 T. L. R. 286 (beer bottle containing oxalic acid: injury to health); Bostock & Co., Ltd. v. Nicholson & Sons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K. B. 725 (sulphuric acid, warranted commercially free from arsenic, and ordinarily used in manufacture of beer: price paid recoverable and value of goods destroyed); Holden v. Bostock & Co. (1902), 50 W. R. 323, C. A. (sugar for making beer containing arsenic: market value of beer destroyed etc.); Milburn v. Belloni (1868), 39 New York State Reports, 53 (coal dust for making bricks: bricks worthless); Crage v. Fry (1903), 67 J. P. 240 (fish bought condemned and destroyed by public authority: value of fish and costs of proceedings); Cointat v. Myham & Son (1913), 29 T. L. R. 387 (conviction for having bad meat on premises: amount of fine and costs and loss of trade due to conviction); Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 608, C. A. (milk with typhoid germs: death from typhoid); Jackson v. Watson & Sons, [1909] 2 K. B. 193, C. A. (tinned salmon: death of buyer's wife through eating it); British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. of London, Ltd., [1912] A. C. 673, H. L., reversing S. C., [1912] 3 K. B. 128, C. A. (engine unduly expensive to work: increased cost of working). Where the ordinary use of the goods sold is the creation by the buyer of a new product, as, e.g., where seed is sold, the difference between the value of the product, if the goods had answered to the warranty, and the value of the actual product, are damages naturally resulting from the breach of warranty (Randall v. Raper, supra), unless the inferiority of the goods might have been detected before they were dealt with, in which case the damages do not directly or naturally result (Wagstaff v. Short-Horn Dairy Co., supra); and if the product is worthless the value of other goods used in the production and spoil may also be recovered (Bostock & Co., Ltd. v. Nicholson & Sons, Ltd., supra). Where goods are bought for the buyer's use, and the warranted quality is to continue during a period, the measure of damages is primâ facie the buyer's estimated loss during the period by the use of the goods, as, e.g., where a machine is sold having a certain commercial life (British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. of London, Ltd., supra). But the buyer must minimise his loss if he can; and, if he buys elsewhere a substituted article, primâ facie he can recover from the seller the expenses incident to the purchase, if they do not exceed the damages otherwise recoverable (ibid.; quære, whether he is not bound to buy in such a case as Speak v. Taylor (1894), 10 T. L. R. 224 (buyer's retention of admittedly useless article)). But, if the substituted article be so superior to the one replaced, e.g., so as to show that the commercial life of the article replaced has ended, the damages may be reduced in proportion to the buyer's gain by the possession of the superior article (British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. of London, Ltd., supra). As to damages for the buyer's loss of custom, which are ordinarily not recoverable under the Sale

SECT. 2.

Remedies of the Buyer.

Breach of warranty of quality.

Return of goods or notice of breach unnecessary.

Substituted remedy by agreement.

In the case of breach of warranty of quality, such loss is prima facie the difference between the value of the goods at the time of delivery (e) to the buyer and the value they would have had if they had answered to the warranty (f).

477. Unless otherwise agreed, it is not a condition precedent to the buyer's right of action for breach of warranty (g), or to his defence, if sued for the price, in that behalf, that he should return the goods to the seller, or notify him of the breach (h).

478. On a breach of warranty the buyer, if he has previously tendered the goods to the seller, may recover the expenses of the keep and preservation thereof until a reasonable opportunity occurs for a resale (i).

479. By express agreement (k) of the parties an action for breach of warranty may be excluded and another remedy compulsorily substituted (l), or the buyer may be given the option of pursuing a of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (2), see Fitzgerald v. Leonard (1893), 32 L. R. Ir. 675; Bostock & Co., Ltd. v. Nicholson & Sons, Ltd., [1904] 1 K. B. 725; and, on the subject generally, see, further, title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 336, 337; and, in particular, as to the recovery of legal costs incurred in litigation with third persons, ibid., pp. 326—328. Where there is a warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, there are usually questions of special damages, the right to recover which is saved by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 54; see p. 277, post.

(e) The value may be taken at a time subsequent to delivery, where the seller has delayed the buyer's resale, and the goods are resold within a reasonable time (Loder v. Kekulé (1857), 3 C. B. (N. S.) 128). So also where the warranty is of a future event, there is no breach until the event is determined, and the difference in value must then be taken (Ashworth v. Wells (1898), 78 L. T. 136, C. A.), unless the difference at some other time was contemplated (Woodward v. Powers (1870), 105 Massachusetts Reports, 108 (stock warranted to be of certain value within year)).

Nicholson & Sons, Ltd.*, [1904] 1 K. B. 725, 739). It is a sub-rule to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53 (2). Cases not falling within it must be governed by ibid., s. 53 (2), or, where there are special damages, by ibid., s. 54; see p. 277, post.

Where the substituted remedy, whether obligatory on the buyer or optional, is a return of the goods to the seller—

(1) the buyer may return them, although they may not be in the same condition as when he received them, unless the change of condition was caused by his act or default (n); and

(2) a failure by the buyer to return the goods is, without prejudice to his right to recover the price, if paid, excused where, without such act or default, the goods have, since their delivery, either physically perished, or have otherwise, in a commercial sense, ceased to exist as such (o).

Remedies of the Buyer.

Where remedy is a return of the goods.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Special Damages, Interest, and Failure of Consideration.

480. Nothing in the Act (p) affects the right of the buyer or the seller to recover interest (q) or special damages in any case where by law interest or special damages may be recoverable, or to recover money paid where the consideration (q) for the payment of it has failed (r).

The rules applicable to contracts generally apply; see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 304, 311 et seq.; and compare title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., pp. 37 et seq. Many of the cases draw no distinction between general and special damage, the reason being that, where the special facts are properly pleaded, both general and special damages follow the same rule, that is to say, they must directly and naturally result from the breach in the circumstances; see title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 311, 313. Illustrations of special damages under contracts of sale are:—Non-delivery—Peterson v. Ayre (1853), 13 C. B. 353 (existence of market: contingent profits of sub-buyer not recoverable); *Portman v. Part VII.—Supplementary Statutory Provisions.

SECT. 1.—General Explanatory Provisions.

482. Where any right, duty, or liability would arise (b) under a contract of sale by implication of law it may be negated or varied by express agreement, or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by usage, if the usage is such as to bind (c) both parties to the contract (d).

725); but the buyer cannot recover the price where the goods delivered are merely inferior to the contract, no condition having been broken (Fortune v. Lingham (1810), 2 Camp. 416). So the buyer can recover the price where the contract is void as founded on some mutual mistake, as, e.g., under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 6 (see Cox v. Prentice (1815), 3 M. & S. 344 (part of price overpaid); title MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., p. 9), or has been avoided by implication of law, and the price was not payable at the time of the avoidance, as, e.g., under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 7; but he cannot recover the price if the contract is avoided in a specified event and by express agreement the seller is entitled to retain the money (United States of America v. Pelly (1899), 15 T. L. R. 166). Again, the buyer may recover the price where the contract has by agreement been rescinded (Caswell v. Coare (1809), 1 Taunt. 566; Head v. Tattersall (1871), L. R. 7 Exch. 7 (express condition subsequent); Gomery v. Bond (1815), 3 M. & S. 378; Long v. Preston (1828), 2 Moo. & P. 262 (conduct of seller showing rescission)), or the buyer is entitled to treat it as rescinded by the seller's wrongful repudiation; secus, where the buyer only is in default (Fitt v. Cassanet (1842), 4 Man. & G. 898; Thomas v. Brown (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 714). The buyer is not entitled to interest on the price (Walker v. Constable (1798), 1 Bos. & P. 306 (contract rescinded)), even although it was received by a fraudulent seller (Crookford v. Winter (1807), 1 Camp. 124, 129). Where the contract is in writing, parol evidence is not admissible to show that part of the price was paid in consideration of speedy delivery, which has not been made (Brady v. Oastler (1864), 3 H. & C. 112, MARTIN, B., dissenting). As to actions for money had and received, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 473 et seq.

(a) Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., Howard v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., [1896] 2 Ch. 93, C. A. (set-off); Chanter v. Leese (1839), 5 M. & W. 698, Ex. Ch.

(b) I.e., under a contract of sale simpliciter, apart from express agreement etc.

(c) As to the requisites of a valid usage, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 252 et seq.

(d) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 55; Landauer & Co. v. Craven and Speeding Brothers, [1912] 2 K. B. 94 (usage as to through bill of lading). This provision must be read subject to the ordinary rules governing the admissibility of oral evidence in relation to written contracts (Re Walkers, Winsor & Hamm and Shaw, Son & Co., [1904] 2 K. B. 152 (usage); and see, generally, titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 509 et seq.; CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 260 et seq.; EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., pp. 566, 568). To exclude a term implied by law, the express agreement must be inconsistent with it, e.g., an express warranty of quality may be consistent with a condition implied by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14 (Bigge v. Parkinson (1862), 7 H. & N. 955, Ex. Ch.).

SECT. 1.

General Explanatory Provisions.

Meaning of "reasonable time."

Statutory rights enforceable by action.

Separate contract for each lot.

When sale complete.

Reservation
by seller of right to bid.

483. Where, by the Act (e), any reference is made to a reasonable time, the question what is a reasonable time is a question of fact (f).

484. Where any right, duty, or liability is declared by the Act, it may, unless otherwise (g) by the Act provided, be enforced by action (h).

SECT. 2.—Sales at Auction.

485. Where goods are put up for sale by auction in lots, each lot is prima facie deemed to be the subject of a separate contract of sale (i).

486. A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner (k). Until such announcement is made any bidder may retract his bid (k).

487. A right to bid at an auction may be reserved expressly by or on behalf of the seller (l), and, where a right to bid is expressly reserved, but not otherwise, the seller, or any one person on his behalf, may bid at the auction (m).

For illustrations of this provision, see Re Walkers, Winsor & Hamm and Shaw, Son & Co., supra; and this title, passim, particularly p. 163, ante.

(e) As in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 18, r. 4 (b), 29 (2), 35, 37, 48 (3).

(f) Ibid., s. 56; see title TIME.

(g) These words appear to refer to the unpaid seller's rights of lien, stoppage in transitu, and resale (see pp. 242 et seq., ante), which are enforceable without action. There may perhaps be also a reference to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4.

(h) Ibid., s. 57; see p. 118, ante. The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 57, was enacted probably to negative the English common law rule that, where a statute provides no specific penalty, disobedience to its provisions is indictable as a misdemeanour; see R. v. Harris (1791), 4 Term Rep. 202; and see titles CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 459, note (i); STATUTES. The particular rights provided by the Act are in addition to the general rights and duties of the parties.

(i) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 58 (1); Emmerson v. Heelis (1809), 2 Taunt. 38; James and Chapman v. Shore (1816), 1 Stark. 426; Roots v. Dormer (Lord) (1832), 4 B. & Ad. 77; Couston v. Chapman (1872), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 250; compare Dykes v. Blake (1838), 4 Bing. (N. C.) 463 (single contract in writing after knocking down of lots). See also title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 505.

(k) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 58 (2); Payne v. Cave (1789), 3 Term Rep. 148; McManus v. Fortescue, [1907] 2 K. B. 1, C. A.; Fenwick v. Macdonald, Fraser & Co. (1904), 6 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 850; see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., pp. 510, 511. Conversely, the seller may withdraw the goods (Fenwick v. Macdonald, Fraser & Co., supra). When the sale is notified to be subject to a reserve, every offer by bidding, and the acceptance by the auctioneer, is subject to the reserve having been reached (McManus v. Fortescue, supra). The same principle, it is conceived, applies where there is any other condition precedent to the existence of a contract.

(m) Ibid., s. 58; Thornett v. Haines (1846), 15 M. & W. 367; R. v. Marsh (1829), 3 Y. & J. 331; Parfitt v. Jepson (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 529; see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 509. It should be remarked that the Act does not limit the seller or his agent to one bid; also that the words "but not otherwise" show that the mere reservation of a price

Where a sale by auction is not notified to be subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, it is not lawful for the seller himself to bid, or to employ any person to bid at such sale, or for the auctioneer knowingly to take any bid from the seller or any such person. Any sale contravening this rule may be treated as fraudulent by the buyer (n).

SECT. 3.—Saving Clauses.

489. The rules in bankruptcy (p) relating to contracts of sale continue to apply thereto, notwithstanding anything in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (q).

Rules in bankruptcy and of

The rules of the common law, including the law merchant, save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (r), and in particular the rules relating to does not justify the employment of a bidder; see Gilliat v. Gilliat (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 60. On the other hand, it seems that the reservation of a right to bid justifies the seller in withdrawing the goods when the reserve has not been reached, although there is no notification of a reserve in the conditions of sale, and the seller does not actually exercise his right to bid (Fenwick v. Macdonald, Fraser & Co. (1904), 6 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 850, per Lord YOUNG, at p. 853).

(n) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 58 (3). This clause enacts the common law rule; see also Cicero De Officiis, Bk. 3, ch. 15. The buyer has alternative remedies, to sue for the tort or to avoid the contract. See, generally, Bexwell v. Christie (1776), Cowp. 395 (no duty of auctioneer towards seller to bid for seller); Howard v. Castle (1796), 6 Term Rep. 642; Crowder v. Austin (1826), 3 Bing. 368 (highest bidder to be purchaser: seller cannot recover price); Wheeler v. Collier (1827), Mood. & M. 123 (puffer up to limited sum only: sale none the less void); R. v. Marsh (1829), 3 Y. & J. 331 (one bidding reserved to Crown, and exceeded); see S. C. (1831), 1 Cr. & J. 306 (bonâ fide bid for himself by Crown agent); Thornett v. Haines (1846), 15 M. & W. 367 (sale without reserve: buyer recovers price from auctioneer); Green v. Baverstock (1863), 14 C. B. (N. S.) 204 (highest bidder to be purchaser: action by auctioneer for non-clearance of goods); Parfitt v. Jepson (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 529 (highest bidder to be purchaser: one bid reserved, three made: law considered). An agent employed to make fictitious bids on behalf of the seller cannot recover his commission therefor (Walker v. Nightingale (1726), 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 193); see, generally, title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., pp. 508, 509.

(o) Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 58 (4). It seems to have been formerly a rule in equity that, where a sale of land was not notified to be without reserve, one bidder might, even without express stipulation, be employed to prevent a sale at an undervalue (Green v. Baverstock (1863), 14 C. B. (N. S.) 204, per WILLES, J., at p. 208; but see Mortimer v. Bell (1865), 1 Ch. App. 10, per Lord CRANWORTH, L.C.); and see title SALE OF LAND, p. 319, post. The present clause requires an express reservation.

(p) See title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 1 et seq., and, in particular, the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52); ibid., ss. 4 (b), (c), 48 (fraudulent preference), 44 (2) (iii.) (reputed ownership), 49 (protected transactions), 56 (power of trustee to sell), 57 (4) (consideration for sale), 55 (1) (disclaimer by trustee of onerous contracts), 55 (5) (rescission by court of contract with bankrupt), 114 (non-joinder of bankrupt in action on joint contract).

(h) The Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71) repeals the following English statutes:—(1603) 1 Jac. 1, c. 12 (brokers); Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), ss. 16, 17; Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1829 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 7; Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), ss. 1, 2. The schedule of repeals is itself repealed, with ibid., s. 60, by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 49). It should be noticed that the Act does not expressly repeal the Irish Statute of Frauds, stat. (1695) 7 Will. 3, c. 12, s. 13.

Part I.—The Contract of Sale.

SECT. 1.—Requisites for Existence of the Contract.

491. A contract for the sale of land is governed by the same legal rules as any other contract (a); and it is only necessary to consider here the application of the general law to the particular subject-matter of the sale of land. Thus a contract for sale of land may be made either by private agreement between the parties or by public auction (b); but, however made, it must contain the ordinary essentials of a contract, namely, an offer by one party to the other, and an acceptance of that offer by the party to whom it was made (c).

492. On a sale by auction, the offer is made by the purchaser in the form of the bid which is ultimately accepted by the auctioneer as the agent of the vendor (d). The advertisement of the sale is not itself an offer, but only a declaration of intention to hold the sale and allow the public generally to make offers (e).

493. An acceptance must be absolute and unqualified (f). There is no completed contract if the acceptance is "subject to approval of terms of contract" (g), or "subject to a formal contract being prepared and signed by both parties as approved by their solicitors" (h), or where it otherwise appears that all the terms of the contract are not definitely settled or that additional terms are to be agreed to and inserted in the formal contract (i).

As to withdrawal of the property from sale, see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 511, and notes (q), (r), ibid. A bid, like any other offer, may be retracted before it is accepted, i.e., before the fall of the auctioneer's hammer; see Payne v. Cave (1789), 3 Term Rep. 148.

Ely (Marchioness)* (1865), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 638, per Lord WESTBURY, at p. 646; see also title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 371.

(i) Donnison v. People's Café Co. (1881), 45 L. T. 187, C. A. Where what purports to be a clean acceptance of an offer is accompanied by a formal contract containing terms which were not referred to in the offer, there is no completed agreement (Jones v. Daniel, [1894] 2 Ch. 332; Clark v. Robinson (1903), 51 W. R. 443), but where the formal contract contains no new terms, there is an enforceable contract even though the formal document is not executed (Filby v. Hounsell, [1896] 2 Ch. 737, 742; Rouse v.

SECT. 1.
Requisites for Existence of the Contract.

Final agreement.

Contract on correspondence.

On the other hand, if it appears that the parties have agreed upon the essential terms of the sale, a mere intimation of a desire that the agreement shall be embodied in another document of a more formal nature (k), or the expression of what is necessarily a condition, not of the acceptance, but of the contract itself (l), does not prevent the agreement being enforceable.

494. It is a question of construction whether the parties have come to a final agreement, though they intend to have a more formal document drawn up (m). Where the agreement depends on a series of letters or other documents, the whole of them must be considered, and a document which, taken alone, appears to be an absolute acceptance of a previous offer does not make the contract binding if, in fact, it does not extend to all the terms under negotiation, of which the vendor can adduce verbal evidence (n).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Memorandum in Writing.

495. A contract for the sale of land is not enforceable unless evidenced by some memorandum or note thereof in writing, signed by the party to be charged or some person lawfully authorised by him to sign (o).

Ginsberg (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 632). Similarly, there is no completed contract where the acceptance is subject to conditions stated therein or to be stated by the acceptor or someone on his behalf (Crossley v. Maycock (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 180); see also Santa Fé Land Co., Ltd. v. Forestal Land, Timber and Railways Co., Ltd. (1910), 26 T. L. R. 534 ("subject to a formal contract to be approved by your solicitors and ourselves on acceptance of the offer, when any minor details can be settled"); and compare May v. Thomson (1882), 20 Ch. D. 705, C. A. 496. The memorandum must contain all the essential terms of the contract and must show that the parties have agreed to those terms (p). The essential terms are (1) the parties (q); (2) the property (r); and (3) the price (s).

As regards the parties, it is sufficient if they are so described as to be definitely ascertainable. A party may be described by some character which he fills, but the description must be one to which the person intended to be described, and no other, can answer (a).

signature, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 375—379; Brooks v. Billingham (1912), 56 Sol. Jo. 503; and, as to authority to sign, as distinguished from authority to arrange terms or settle the form of a contract, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 378, note (r). In Wallace v. Roe, [1903] 1 I. R. 32, a vendor was held to be bound where the memorandum was signed by the purchaser and by the vendor's agent, though the latter signed as "witness." As to the auctioneer failing to sign a memorandum, see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 518.

The expression "contract or sale of lands" etc. has been held to cover a contract to procure that another shall acquire a lease or other interest in land (Horsely v. Graham (1869), L. R. 5 C. P. 9); an offer and the acceptance thereof made in pursuance of an option clause contained in a former document (Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright (1879), 11 Ch. D. 421, 434); a contract for sale of the benefit of a mortgage or charge upon land (Toppin v. Lomas (1855), 16 C. B. 145; Driver v. Broad, [1893] 1 Q. B. 744, C. A. (debentures)), or of an equity of redemption in land (Massey v. Johnson (1847), 1 Exch. 241, 255); and an agreement to give a charge on land or rent (Re Whitting, Ex parte Hall (1879), 10 Ch. D. 615, 620, C. A.); see also title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 582.

Easements and profits à prendre are both interests in land within the statute; see title EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, Vol. XI., pp. 237, 340; and so also is an advowson (Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 170, 178), and the profits of a clergyman's living (Alchin v. Hopkins (1834), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 99, 102). As to what general descriptions include an advowson, see title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., p. 564. A collateral agreement, not involving an obligation on either party to acquire an interest in land, though depending for its operation upon the acquisition of such an interest, is not within the statute (see Angell v. Duke (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 174; Boston v. Boston, [1904] 1 K. B. 124, C. A. (where A. agreed verbally that if B. bought certain land A. would pay B. the amount of the purchase-money); compare also Erskine v. Adeane (1873), 8 Ch. App. 756; Re Banks, Weldon v. Banks (1912), 56 Sol. Jo. 362); though in general a stipulation referring to the subject-matter of the contract must be found in it (Jones v. Lavington, [1903] 1 K. B. 253, 256, C. A.; Crawford v. White City Rink (Newcastle-on-Tyne), Ltd. (1913), 57 Sol. Jo. 357); but a representation made at the time of the sale may operate as a warranty (De Lassalle v. Guildford, [1901] 2 K. B. 215, C. A.); see also Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, [1913] A. C. 30, 50; and see titles DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 447; LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 373. As to sales of growing crops etc., see title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., pp. 293, 294; Teal v. Auty (1820), 2 Brod. & Bing. 99; Coombe v. Mitchem (1912), 134 L. T. Jo. 159; Dart, Vendors and Purchasers, 7th ed., pp. 226 et seq.

(p) See title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 372. A letter may be a sufficient memorandum although it repudiates the contract (Dewar v. Mintoft, [1912] 2 K. B. 373, 387); and see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 368.

(s) Ibid., pp. 374, 375.

(a) Thus "proprietor" may be a sufficient description, but not "vendor"; see ibid., pp. 371, 372, and the cases there cited. The purchaser must be clearly indicated as such (Dewar v. Mintoft, supra). A contract made in the name of one who is an agent binds the undisclosed principal; see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 206.

- SECT. 2. Similarly the property must be so described as to show clearly, in the circumstances of the case, what is the subject-matter of the contract (b).
- Evidence of the Contract. The application of the description in the memorandum to particular persons, or to particular property, may be ascertained by parol evidence (c), but the result of such ascertainment must be unambiguous (d).
- Property.
- Price. If the price has been definitely fixed, the memorandum must state what it is (e); if it is to be ascertained in a definite manner, that manner must be specified (f); if the price is to be the fair value of the property, that fact must be stated or implied (g). But where the memorandum does not fix the price or provide for its ascertainment, an agreement that the sale is to be for a reasonable price is not implied (h), and the contract is unenforceable (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Where Writing Dispensed With.

Exceptions from operation of Statute of Frauds.

497. To the general rule that a contract for the sale of land is not enforceable unless it complies with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (k) there are certain exceptions.

(b) See title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 372, and the cases cited ibid., note (e). The interest sold need not be stated: unless the contrary appears, this is presumed to be the unincumbered fee simple; see p. 301, post.

(c) See title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 448.

(d) Ogilvie v. Foljambe (1817), 3 Mer. 53; Shardlow v. Cotterell (1881), 20 Ch. D. 90, C. A.; Plant v. Bourne, [1897] 2 Ch. 281, C. A.; compare Bainbridge v. Wade (1850), 16 Q. B. 89.

(e) See Elmore v. Kingscote (1826), 5 B. & C. 583; Re Kharaskhoma Exploring and Prospecting Syndicate, [1897] 2 Ch. 464, 467, C. A. But it is not necessary that the price should be definitely stated; "it would undoubtedly be sufficient in any case if the memorandum were so framed that any person of ordinary capacity must infer from the perusal of it that such and no other was the consideration . . . there must be a well-grounded inference to be necessarily collected from the terms of the memorandum that the consideration stated in the declaration" (i.e., the statement of claim in an action on the contract) "and no other than such consideration was intended by the parties to be the ground of the promise" (Hawes v. Armstrong (1835), 1 Scott, 661, per TINDAL, C.J., at p. 668; and see Re Eyre, McAndrew v. Norris (1895), 72 L. T. 585).

(f) Milnes v. Gery (1807), 14 Ves. 400, 408; Wilks v. Davis (1817), 3 Mer. 507; see Frewen v. Hays (1912), 106 L. T. 516, P.C. But where the manner so specified cannot be followed, e.g., by reason of the death of the person agreed upon as valuer, there is in effect no agreement as to price, and the court cannot ascertain the price in any other manner and enforce the contract with the price so ascertained, for that would be making a new agreement for the parties; see Milnes v. Gery, supra; Wilks v. Davis, supra; Blundell v. Brettargh (1810), 17 Ves. 232; Gourlay v. Somerset (Duke) (1815), 19 Ves. 429, 430; Morgan v. Milman (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 24, 34, C. A.; Vickers v. Vickers (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 529; Firth v. Midland Rail. Co. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 100.

(g) Milnes v. Gery, supra, at p. 407.

(h) Gourlay v. Somerset (Duke), supra, at p. 431; Morgan v. Milman, supra, per KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J., at p. 37. Such a term would be implied in the case of an agreement for the sale of goods, but the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 8 (2) (see title SALE OF GOODS, p. 147, ante), has no application to land.

(i) See note (e), supra; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 374; Blagden v. Bradbear (1806), 12 Ves. 466, 471. As to valuation of fixtures, see p. 321, post.

(k) 29 Car. 2, c. 3; see p. 291, ante.

Where the sale is made by order of the court, whether by auction or private contract, the nature of the proceedings precludes the possibility of the mischief which the statute was intended to prevent, and although in practice the purchaser is always required to sign the bidding paper, this is not essential to make the sale binding on him (l).

If, in an action on the contract, the defendant does not plead the Statute of Frauds (m) specifically (n), he is taken to have admitted that there is a sufficient note or memorandum to satisfy the requirements of the statute, or the contract may be proved by oral evidence (o), and is enforceable against him although in fact it does not comply with those requirements (p).

498. A party cannot rely upon non-compliance with the Statute of Frauds (q) where it would in effect be a fraud on his part for him to do so (r). Thus, in an action for specific performance, where the

It is not necessary to plead any particular section of the statute, but where a particular section is pleaded, that alone can be relied on, and the pleading cannot be amended so as to plead another section (James v. Smith, [1891] 1 Ch. 384; affirmed on other grounds (1891), 65 L. T. 544, C. A.; see Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1913, p. 251). If the plaintiff alleges a written contract and then seeks at the trial to prove an oral contract, the defendant, if he has omitted to plead the statute, will be allowed to amend (Brunning v. Odhams Brothers, Ltd. (1896), 75 L. T. 602, H. L.). As to pleading the statute, see, further, Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1913, p. 251.

Gillespie* (1805), 11 Ves. 621, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 628). "The principle of the court is, that the Statute of Frauds was not made to cover fraud" (Lincoln v. Wright (1859), 4 De G. & J. 16, C. A., per TURNER, L.J., at p. 22). plaintiff seeks to enforce a written contract which was entered into by the defendant in reliance on a verbal agreement for variation or amplification of its terms, or for the performance of some other collateral condition, the defendant is allowed to prove such verbal agreement, on the ground that to insist upon his performance of the written contract without performance of the verbal agreement would amount to a fraud upon him(s); and, where the making of a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the statute is prevented by the fraud of one of the parties, he cannot rely upon the absence of such a memorandum(t).

The verbal agreement must be made at the time of the making of the written contract, so as in effect to form part of a single agreement; a distinct and collateral verbal contract cannot be so given effect to (Snelling v. Thomas (1874), L. R. 17 Eq. 303); and see title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

(a) Ungley v. Ungley (1877), 5 Ch. D. 887, 890, C. A. The doctrine of part performance is based either upon the ground referred to in note (r), p. 293, ante, that the statute is not to be made an instrument of fraud, or upon the ground that the action is not based upon the contract, but upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract (Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 475). Part performance does not cure uncertainty (Waring and Gillow, Ltd. v. Thompson (1912), 29 T. L. R. 154, per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 156); and, as to part performance, see, further, title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 12, 65; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; and, for the application of the doctrine to agreements for leases, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 375 et seq.

(b) Gunter v. Halsey (1739), Amb. 586; Maddison v. Alderson, supra, at pp. 479, 485, 492; Dickinson v. Barrow, [1904] 2 Ch. 339 (where the plaintiffs (builders) made alterations at defendant's request in the course of building a house in reliance upon a verbal agreement for its sale to the defendant); compare Wills v. Stradling (1797), 3 Ves. 378 (parol agreement for a new lease); Ungley v. Ungley, supra; Frame v. Dawson (1807), 14 Ves. 385. It has been said that the acts must be of such a nature that for the party charged to refuse to perform the contract on the ground of 500. Payment by a purchaser of the whole or any part of his purchase-money is not a sufficient act of part performance (c). But where possession is taken and money is expended in repairs or improvements, this amounts to part performance, provided the court is satisfied that the expenditure would not have been made if no contract had been in existence (d); and the mere taking possession of land under a verbal contract, without anything else, may be enough to take the contract out of the statute (e).

In order that the doctrine of part performance may apply, the oral evidence (f) must clearly show that there is a concluded contract of such a nature that, if it were evidenced by writing, the court would enforce it (g).

non-compliance with the statute would amount to fraud (Gunter v. Halsey (1739), Amb. 586; Walker v. Walker (1740), 2 Atk. 98, 100; Buckmaster v. Harrop (1802), 7 Ves. 341, 345; *Olinan v. (c) Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 479 ("the best explanation of it seems to be, that the payment of money is an equivocal act, not (in itself), until the connection is established by parol testimony, indicative of a contract concerning land"); Hughes v. Morris (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 349, C. A., per KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J., at p. 356; Britain v. Rossiter (1879), 11 Q. B. D. 123, 131, C. A. But in the case of an agreement for a lease, payment of an increased rent appears to be a sufficient act of part performance; see Nunn v. Fabian (1865), 1 Ch. App. 35, and the other cases cited in title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 376, 377. Nunn v. Fabian, supra, was explained by BAGGALLAY, L.J., in Humphreys v. Green (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 148, C. A., at p. 156. In Thursby v. Eccles (1900), 70 L. J. (Q. B.) 91, however, BIGHAM, J., was of opinion that the payment of rent did not take a contract for tenancy out of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), and stated that he saw no distinction in principle between payment of purchase-money and payment of rent. The old authorities disclose a conflict of opinion on this point; see Pengall (Lord) v. Ross (1709), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 46, pl. 12 (part payment of fine for grant of a lease held not to be sufficient part performance); Lacon v. Mertins (1743), 3 Atk. 1, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 4 ("paying of money has been always held in this court as a part performance"); Main v. Melbourne (1799), 4 Ves. 720, 722, 724 (payment of a substantial part will do); Olinan v. Cooke, supra, at p. 41 ("part payment does not take such agreement out of the statute"). In Watt v. Evans (1834), 4 Y. & C. (EX.), Appendix, 579, it was stated that the balance of authority was in favour of the contract not being taken out of the statute although the payment was of a substantial part of the purchase-money. In other cases the point had been left open (Coles v. Trecothick (1804), 9 Ves. 234; Aveling v. Knipe (1815), 19 Ves. 441, 446; Ex parte Hooper (1815), 19 Ves. 477, 480).

(g) In Britain v. Rossiter, supra, it was held that the doctrine was confined to questions relating to land; but this seems to be

Contract.

Ambiguous

The principle applies to cases where a contract with a corporation, which would otherwise be unenforceable owing to the absence of the corporate seal (h), has been partly performed (i).

501. Where the doing of the act relied on is equally consistent with the existence or non-existence of the contract sought to be enforced, the act does not amount to part performance (k). Thus the fact that a tenant does repairs for which he is not liable under the terms of his holding, or does any other thing which might be calculated to benefit him as tenant, is not necessarily referable to a contract to purchase, and cannot be given in evidence as part performance of such a contract (k). An act which is merely preparatory to the contract cannot be an act of part performance (l).

SECT. 3.—Disclosure of Material Facts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Avoidance
of contract.

502. In certain cases a contract may be avoided on the ground that the consent of one of the parties was given in ignorance of material facts which were within the knowledge of the other party (m). A contract for the sale of land is not a contract uberrimæ fidei, in which there is an absolute duty upon each party to make full disclosure to the other of all material facts of which he has inconsistent with the opinion of Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., as expressed in Hammersley v. De Biel (Baron) (1845), 12 Cl. & Fin. 45, 64, n., and in Lassence v. Tierney (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551, 572; see Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 474; and in McManus v. Cooke (1887), 35 Ch. D. 681, KAY, J., held that "probably" it applies "to all cases in which a court of equity would entertain a suit for specific performance if the alleged contract had been in writing" (ibid., at p. 697). But, where the circumstances are such that a decree for specific performance could not be obtained, the doctrine cannot be relied upon to support a claim for damages based upon the informal agreement; see Re Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co. (1886), 33 Ch. D. 16, C. A., per CHITTY, J., at p. 18; Lavery v. Pursell (1888), 39 Ch. D. 508, per CHITTY, J., at p. 518. Thus the doctrine does not apply in any case in which, even if the contract were proved, specific performance would be refused on the ground that damages afford an adequate remedy (Turner v. Melladew (1903), 19 T. L. R. 273); and see, further, pp. 409 et seq., post; titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 380; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

SECT. 3.
Disclosure of Material Facts.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Disclosure by the Vendor.

(i.) In General.

503. Information in the possession of the vendor, which it is his duty to disclose to the purchaser, may relate either to defects in the quality of the land sold or to defects in his title.

Disclosure.

In one sense all defects in the quality of land agreed to be sold are defects of title, since their existence precludes the vendor from showing a good title to such enjoyment of the particular piece of land as he has agreed to sell. But in practice, defects which will prejudice a purchaser in the physical enjoyment of the property are treated as defects of quality (p), and defects which will expose him to adverse claims to the land are defects of title (q).

Defects of quality and defects of title.

(ii.) Defects of Quality.

504. Defects of quality may be either patent or latent. Patent defects are such as are discoverable by inspection and ordinary vigilance on the part of a purchaser; latent defects are such as would not be revealed by any inquiry which a purchaser is in a position to make before entering into the contract for purchase.

Nature of defects.

As regards patent defects, the primary rule is caveat emptor; a purchaser should make inspection and inquiry as to that which he is proposing to buy (r). If he omits to ascertain whether the land is such as he desires to acquire he cannot complain afterwards on discovering defects of which he would have been aware if he had taken ordinary steps to ascertain its physical condition, and which are not inconsistent with the description by which the vendor contracted to sell the property (s).

Patent defects :
caveat emptor.

On the other hand, any active concealment by the vendor of defects which would otherwise be patent, or any conduct calculated to mislead a purchaser or lull his suspicions with respect to a defect known to the vendor, is treated as fraudulent and renders the contract voidable by the purchaser (t); and the consequences are the same whether the vendor misrepresents the condition of the property, or an agent employed by him to effect the sale does so, even innocently (u).

Erroneous
purchaser.

505. A vendor is not, however, bound to correct an erroneous opinion of the purchaser upon matters as to which the purchaser has the opportunity of forming an independent opinion, whether in fact he uses such opportunity or not (v); and this is so notwithstanding that the vendor knows or believes that the purchaser contracts in reliance upon such erroneous opinion (a). But where the purchaser mistakenly believes the vendor to be in effect giving a warranty as to quality and enters into the contract on this footing, the vendor, if he is aware of the mistake, must correct it, and, if he fails to do so, the contract is not binding on the purchaser, though if the vendor is not aware of the mistake, the purchaser is bound (b).

quality.

506. Primâ facie, the rule caveat emptor (c) applies also to latent defects of quality, and there is no implied warranty that land agreed to be sold is of any particular quality or suitable for any particular purpose (d).

(d) Spoor v. Green (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 99, per CLEASBY, B., at p. 110. The rule appears to be as stated in the text, though there does not seem to be any authority directly in point; see Williams, Vendor and Purchaser, 2nd ed., pp. 763, 764, and an article by the same author in 50 Sol.

507. Where, however, the latent defects are of such a nature that, if known to the purchaser, they would to the vendor's knowledge prevent him from entering into the contract, the vendor is, it seems, bound to disclose them, and if he fails to do so he cannot obtain specific performance of the contract (e).

508. The contract is not enforceable by a vendor who actually represents that the property has certain qualities which it does not in fact possess (f), such as that land is ripe for immediate development, or suitable for development, when there is a covered culvert running under the land (g), or where special expense must be incurred before it can be used for building (h); that a farm is in a high state of cultivation (i); that premises are in good

James*, supra, an intending lessee refused to complete on the ground that the character of the neighbouring houses made it impossible to use the house in question for a family residence. WIGRAM, V.-C., decided that no complete contract was in fact made, but dealt obiter with the present point, on the footing, apparently, that the purpose for which the house was required was known to the intending lessor. Some authorities suggest that the rule as laid down in Sugden, Vendors and Purchasers, 14th ed., p. 333, would not be now applied, and that mere silence as to a defect of quality cannot be a ground for rescission or a defence to a claim for specific performance; see Fry, Specific Performance, 5th ed., ss. 705, 713; Turner v. Green, [1895] 2 Ch. 205, 208 (non-disclosure of a fact likely to dispose of the other party not to compromise proceedings); Greenhalgh v. Wright, [1902] 2 Ch. 421 (purchase of shares in a company by directors without disclosing pending negotiations for sale of company's undertaking); and see 50 Sol. Jo. 613. On the other hand, the proposition stated in the text is supported by Carlsh v. Salt, [1906] 1 Ch. 335, where JOYCE, J., held that the service of a party with notice under the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Viet. c. ccxiii.), and the making of an award thereon throwing part of the expense of works upon the owner of the property agreed to be sold, was a material latent defect, non-disclosure of which entitled the purchaser to rescission and the return of his deposit with the costs of investigating title; and in Shepherd v. Croft, [1911] 1 Ch. 521, PARKER, J., distinguished between non-disclosure of latent defects of quality which is within the principle of Flight v. Booth (1834), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 370 (i.e., so far affecting the subject-matter of the contract that it may reasonably be supposed that, but for such non-disclosure, the purchaser might never have entered into the contract at all), and entitles the purchaser to rescind, and non-disclosure of latent defects of quality which is not sufficiently material to be within that principle and only entitles a purchaser to compensation: see also Re Puckett and Smith's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 258, C. Illingworth* (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 248, C. A. (where premises were described as "well supplied with water," and the only water on the premises was that obtained from the local waterworks on payment of the water rate). But a representation of water supply on the sale plan does not necessarily entitle the purchaser to the supply (Fewster v. Turner (1841), 6 Jur. 144).

(s) Redgrave v. Hurd (1881), 20 Ch. D. 1, C. A.; see Attwood v. Small (1838), 6 Cl. & Fin. 232, H. L.; Clapham v. Skillito (1844), 7 Beav. 146; Roots v. Snelling (1883), 48 L. T. 216. It is not sufficient for the vendor to offer the means of verification. "The mere fact that a party has the opportunity of investigating and ascertaining whether a representation is true or false is not sufficient to deprive him of his right to rely on a misrepresentation as a defence to an action for specific performance. . . . The representation once made relieves the party from an investigation, even if the opportunity is afforded" (Redgrave v. Hurd, supra, per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at pp. 22, 23; Stanley v. M'Gauran (1882), 11 L. R. Ir. 314, 331, C.A.). In Smith v. Chadwick (1884), 9 App. Cas. 187, Lord BLACKBURN stated, at p. 196, that the inference, that the representation was the inducement to the contract, was not one of law, as reported to have been said by JESSEL, M.R. (Redgrave v. Hurd, supra, at p. 21), but of fact, and that its weight as evidence must greatly depend on the degree to which the action of the plaintiff was likely to be influenced, and on the absence of other grounds on which he might have acted; and

509. But representations of fact as to the quality of the subject-matter of a contract must be distinguished from such expressions of opinion as to its value or desirability as do not involve any representation of fact. A purchaser cannot avoid liability to perform his contract on the ground that he has been misled by statements which are mere puffing. It has been held to be "puffing" to describe property as "a desirable residence for a family of distinction," though in fact it is a small farmhouse (a), or to describe renewable leaseholds as "nearly equal to freehold" (b), or to describe a house as "substantial and convenient" (c), or "well-built" (d), or "eligible" (e). But where a landlord who has the means of knowing the character of his tenant describes him to an intending purchaser as a "most desirable tenant," this is a representation of fact, and the purchaser is entitled to rescission if it turns out that the tenant has paid his last quarter's rent by dribblets under pressure (f).

510. An agreement to sell land implies, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, that the whole of the vendor's interest in the land is the subject of the agreement (g), and that that interest is an estate in fee simple (h) free from incumbrances (i), unless the purchaser had notice, before entering into the contract, that the title which the vendor was able to give was subject to limitations or incumbrances which the vendor could not remove (k); but such notice does not affect the liability of a vendor who expressly agrees to show a good title (l).

511. Inasmuch as a vendor's title to land is exclusively within his own knowledge, he is bound to disclose all defects in his title to an intending purchaser, and if a purchaser subsequently becomes aware of a defect of title which the vendor did not disclose to him before entering into the contract, he may rescind the contract or resist its specific performance on that ground (m). Whether the sale is made by auction or by private treaty, the purchaser is under no obligation to make inquiry as to defects in the vendor's title, but it is the duty of the vendor to disclose all that is necessary for his own protection (n). The vendor's disclosure should be frank and full; he ought to state that which, if it is not stated, makes what he does state ambiguous or misleading (o). If he desires to preclude a purchaser from objecting to a defect he must do so in plain terms, stating clearly the exact nature of the defect to which the purchaser is not to make objection (p).

notice under the London Building Act, 1894 (f), and an award made thereunder imposing a pecuniary liability on the owner of the property sold (g). Similarly it is a defect of title if the maxim cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos (h) is not applicable to the property sold, owing to the vendor's title not extending to an underground cellar (i) nor to the subjacent minerals (j), or owing to a third party having a right to overhang part of the property (k); all such matters must be disclosed by the vendor (l).

Existing tenancies.

514. In the absence of an intimation to the contrary, a purchaser is entitled to assume that property offered for sale is in hand, so that he will obtain possession of the property on completion; consequently any existing lease or tenancy must be mentioned in the particulars or referred to in the agreement for sale (m). The information as to past or existing tenancies must not be misleading (n); for example, by stating the rent paid by the last tenant and implying, contrary to the fact, that a similar rent can be obtained at the time of the sale (o), or stating the existing tenancies without mentioning that the tenants have given notice to quit (p); or stating that the property is sold with the benefit of leases containing certain covenants without stating that the covenants are not enforceable (q). But on a sale of agricultural land subject to a tenancy, where particulars of the tenancy are given, the fact that the tenant has made improvements which will entitle him to compensation need not be specifically mentioned (r).

Further, where the lease contains the usual covenant to deliver up in repair at the expiration of the term, and part of the demised buildings has been demolished(a), or where underleases have been granted not containing the same covenants as the head lease under which the interest agreed to be sold is derived(b), such facts must be stated.

Where leasehold property is held subject to any onerous or unusual covenants, the vendor must either disclose to the purchaser their existence and nature or give him a reasonable opportunity of inspecting the lease or other document containing the covenants before he enters into the contract(c); and a stipulation in the contract that the vendor's title is accepted does not enable a vendor to compel a purchaser to complete the contract where neither of these courses has been taken(d). Matters

Duty of the

particular case the vendor has given the purchaser such a reasonable opportunity of inspection as to discharge the duty of disclosure is one of fact (e).

516. The vendor need not specifically disclose matters which are necessarily incidental to his tenure of the property. Thus land tax (f) and tithe or tithe rentcharge (g) are liabilities to which all land is presumed to be subject unless the contrary is stated (h); and on a sale of copyhold land the fines and customs of the manor and the lord's rights in respect of minerals need not be referred to in the particulars or agreement for sale (i); and the same, perhaps, applies to rights of mining under the local customs of the mining districts, such customs being notorious (k). The existence of undisclosed quit rents on the property, being incidents of tenure, is a subject for compensation, not a ground of rescission (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Disclosure by the Purchaser.

517. A purchaser is under no obligation to disclose to the vendor any fact known to him and not to the vendor which enhances, or appears to the purchaser to enhance, the value of the property (m). But though simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud, yet, if

This, however, he may be held to do, if he makes some other communication which, without the addition of those facts, would be necessarily, or naturally and probably, misleading. If it is a just conclusion that he did this intentionally, and with a view to mislead in any material point, that is fraud; and it is a sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, if the vendor was the purchaser by any act or word induces the vendor to believe in the existence of a non-existent fact (n), or if he attempts to hurry the vendor into a contract without giving him an opportunity to ascertain the value of the property (o), a court of equity may refuse to order specific performance of the contract at the suit of the purchaser; and the same consequence follows where a purchaser makes false statements of fact which discourage other possible purchasers from competing with him for the property (p).

(n) See the cases cited in note (m), p. 306, ante. "A single word, or (I may add) a nod or a wink, or a shake of the head, or a smile from the purchaser, intended to induce the vendor to believe the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject to be sold, would be sufficient ground for a court of equity to refuse a decree for a specific performance of the agreement" (*Walters v. The following are further illustrations of the meaning of expressions:—the expressions "derivative lease" and "underlease" appear to be in practice synonymous; though strictly, perhaps, an underlease comprises the whole property included in the original lease, while a derivative lease includes only part of the property (Brumfit v. Morton (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1198, per STUART, V.-C., at p. 1201): the expression "ground rent" is used generally to mean a rent less than a rack rent (Stewart v. Alliston (1815), 1 Mer. 26, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 34); strictly, it means the sum paid by the owner or builder of houses for the use of land to build on (Bartlett v. Salmon (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 33, per Lord CRANWORTH, L.C., at p. 41): where what is described as a ground rent is in fact a payment of another kind, not recoverable in the same way as a ground rent, the purchaser is entitled to rescind the contract (Evans v. Robins (1862), 1 H. & C. 302): a "clear yearly rent" means a rent clear of all deductions usually paid by a tenant, but subject to such as are borne by the landlord, e.g., land tax and property tax (Tyreconnell (Lord) v. Ancaster (Duke) (1754), Amb. 237, 240, n.); as to such deductions, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT,

SECT. 1.—Aliens.

519. An alien can acquire and dispose of real property in the United Kingdom in the same manner in all respects as a natural-born British subject (r).

SECT. 2.—Bankrupts.

Bankrupts.

520. An adjudication in bankruptcy operates to vest in the trustee in bankruptcy the property belonging to or vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or acquired by or devolving upon him before his discharge (s). The power to sell the property is exercisable by the trustee in bankruptcy and not by the bankrupt (t); but this does not apply to property, other than real estate, acquired by the bankrupt during the bankruptcy which has not been claimed by the trustee; and until the trustee intervenes, the bankrupt can sell such property to a purchaser (u), who takes bond fide and for value, whether the purchaser has or has not knowledge of the bankruptcy (u).

The Crown has power to appoint an administrator in whom the real and personal property of the convict vests for all the estate and interest of the convict therein, and such administrator has full powers of dealing therewith, whether by way of sale or otherwise (b). 523. Corporations (d), whether sole or aggregate, cannot hold land otherwise than under the authority of a statute or of a licence from the Crown (e). But many incorporated bodies, including companies registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (f), have been empowered by various statutes (g) to acquire and hold land without licence in mortmain and to deal with it, subject, however, to certain consents and restrictions. Metropolitan borough councils may purchase and hold land for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (m), and the London Government Act, 1899 (n), but cannot sell without the sanction of the Local Government Board (o);

Municipal corporations may hold land not exceeding five acres for the purpose of municipal buildings, and, with the approval of the Local Government Board, for other purposes (a);

Parish councils may purchase and hold land for the purpose of public offices, or for allotments, recreation grounds or public walks (b); but the consent of the Local Government Board is required in the case of sales by them (c);

Local education authorities (formerly school boards) have power to acquire and hold land for the purpose of providing sufficient school accommodation in their districts (d), but they cannot sell without the consent of the Education Department (e); authorities.

Poor law

Guardians of the poor may, subject to the sanction of the Local Government Board, purchase land for any purpose relating to the relief of the poor, and may sell the same, subject to the same sanction (f);

Ecclesiastical corporations can in general only sell their lands under statutory provisions (g).

If the contract is voidable only it is valid until repudiated, and it remains valid unless the infant repudiates it within a reasonable time after obtaining his majority, or his representatives so repudiate it on his death and whilst it is still voidable (r).

In particular cases, land belonging to an infant can be dealt with by him, or by persons acting on his behalf, under statutory powers, which are dealt with elsewhere (s).

SECT. 7.—Lunatics and Persons of Unsound Mind.

lunatic.

527. A contract for the sale or purchase of land entered into by a lunatic not so found is voidable if the other party knew of the insanity, and in such a case the transaction can be set aside by the lunatic himself if he recovers, or by his representatives. If the other party had no notice of the insanity and acted in good faith, the contract is valid, and if it is fair and the parties cannot be put in statu quo ante, it will be enforced against the lunatic (t). But in the case of a lunatic so found by inquisition, every contract entered into by him, even during a lucid interval, is absolutely void, his committee alone having power to contract on his behalf so long as the inquisition has not been superseded (a).

to sell and convey land as if they were unmarried, unless they hold it subject to a restraint upon anticipation (d). SECT. 8.
Married Women.

SECT. 9.—Persons Exercising Compulsory Statutory Powers.

530. The exercise of compulsory powers for the purchase of land is regulated by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (f). These powers are exercisable when the special Act authorising a public undertaking incorporates the compulsory clauses of that statute (g), and they are then exercisable with respect to the lands specified or referred to in the special Act (h). To put the compulsory powers in operation the promoters give notice to treat for the land required to be taken (i). This does not in itself take the place of a contract, but, when the price or compensation has been ascertained (which may be done either before or after entry on the land (k)), the actual relation of vendor and purchaser is established between the parties as though there were a formal agreement, with all the rights and obligations ordinarily incident thereto, except so far as they may be excluded by the special Act (l).

purchase.

SECT. 10.—Persons Selling under Order of Court.

531. The court has jurisdiction to make an order for the sale of any land whenever, in any cause or matter relating thereto, a sale appears necessary or expedient (a).

Effect of order.

532. The effect of the order is to bind the legal and equitable interests in the land sold of all persons who are either parties to or bound by the proceedings in which the order is made, and on a conveyance of the legal estate to the purchaser, the concurrence of persons who have equitable interests only is not necessary (b). Formerly, if the court exceeded its jurisdiction or if the sale was not carried out according to the order, though the order itself was validly made, the purchaser obtained no protection from the order (c). But now the order cannot be invalidated as against a purchaser on the ground of want of jurisdiction, or of want of any the words "for the purposes of such suit"; but though the omission gives the court a larger power than it had under that provision, the rule has not extended the jurisdiction of the court so as to enable it to make an order for the sale of land in cases where none could have been made previously (Re Robinson, Pickard v. Wheeler (1885), 31 Ch. D. 247, 249). The original jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery seems to have extended only to (1) sales in satisfaction of creditors' claims enforceable in equity against the land; (2) sales in execution of valid trusts for sale; (3) sales for the purpose of enforcing equitable liens; and (4) sales of partnership lands on dissolution; see Lechmere v. Brasier (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 287; Calvert v. Godfrey (1843), 6 Beav. 97; Mackreth v. Symmons (1808), 15 Ves. 329; Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick (1810), 17 Ves. 298. This original jurisdiction and the statutory jurisdiction conferred by the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), passed, under the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 16, to the High Court of Justice, and is mainly exercisable in the Chancery Division (ibid., s. 34 (3)). It has been further extended by the Partition Acts, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40) and 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 17); the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112); the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18); and the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 25, now supplemented by R. S. C., Ord. 51, r. 1B, enabling the court to make an order for sale in a debenture-holder's action; see Re Origglesstone Coal Co., Stewart v. Origglesstone Coal Co., [1906] 1 Ch. 523. R. 2 Eq. 330; Re Whitham, Whitham v. Davies (1901), 84 L. T. 585. On the other hand, it does not affect either the legal or equitable interests in the land of those persons who are neither parties to nor bound by the proceedings in which the order is made (Craddock v. Piper (1844), 14 Sim. 310; Grey Coat Hospital (Governors) v. Westminster Improvement Commissioners (1857), 1 De G. & J. 531, C. A.; Freeland v. Pearson (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 246). Where the legal estate in land sold under the order of the court is vested in a person under disability, or for any other reason cannot be assured to the purchaser by an ordinary conveyance, the court effects the assurance by means of a vesting order or the appointment of a nominee to convey; see Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 26—41; Judicature Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 61), s. 14; see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

concurrence, consent, notice or service, whether the purchaser has notice of any such want or not (d).

533. The sale may be made either in court or out of court. Where the order directs that the land shall be sold with the approbation of the judge (e), the sale is made in court; that is, all the steps are taken under the direction of the court (f). Usually the court directs the property to be sold by public auction (g), but the sale may be by private treaty (h), and in the latter case a conditional contract is executed and then brought in for confirmation by the court (i). The order may also direct that the sale shall be effected out of court. This is only done when the sale is to be by public auction. The court fixes the reserve price and the auctioneer's remuneration (k), and the proceeds of sale are directed to be paid into court or to trustees, or otherwise dealt with (l). But proceedings altogether out of court are not to be authorised until the judge is satisfied by such evidence as he deems sufficient that all persons interested in the land to be sold are before the court or are bound by the order for sale, and every order authorising such

But this does not confer a good title on the purchaser as against perfect strangers to the proceedings who were not in the contemplation of the court at all when it made the order for sale (Jones v. Barnett, [1899] 1 Ch. 611; affirmed, [1900] 1 Ch. 370, C. A.). As to misrepresentation on sales by order of the court, see Mahomed Kala Mea v. Harperink (1908), 25 T. L. R. 180, P. C.; p. 303, ante, note (k), p. 318, post.

(e) For form of such order, see 1 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 7th ed., p. 324. Where the action is commenced in a district registry it is in the judge's discretion whether the sale shall take place there or in his chambers (Macdonald v. Foster (1877), 6 Ch. D. 193, C. A.).

(f) See R. S. C., Ord. 51, rr. 1A (a), 3. For form of proceedings, see Daniell, Chancery Forms, 5th ed., p. 633.

(g) But the court has power to direct a sale before a master in chambers (Pemberton v. Barnes (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 349), in which case the sale is by open bidding or tender, or by tender followed by open bidding. As to the necessity for an auctioneer's licence, see titles AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 501; REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., p. 650, note (o).

(h) See Pimm v. Insall (1853), 10 Hare, Appendix II., lxxiv.; Osborne v. Foreman (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 122, C. A.; on appeal, sub nom. Barlow v. Osborne (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 556.

(i) The conditional contract is confirmed upon application by summons. For form of summons, see Daniell, Chancery Forms, 5th ed., p. 675. This course is usually adopted where there has been a previous ineffectual attempt to sell by public auction; compare Bousfield v. Hodges (1863), 33 Beav. 90; Berry v. Gibbons, Ex parte Lee (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 150. But though the sale has been confirmed by the master, the court can reopen it before the order has been passed and entered (Re Thomas, Bartley v. Thomas (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 567).

(k) See Pitt v. White (1887), 57 L. T. 650; Re Stedman, Coombe v. Vincent (1888), 58 L. T. 709; for form of order, see 1 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 7th ed., p. 324. For the scales of remuneration usually allowed, see Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1913, p. 732. As to a purchaser knowing the reserve price, see Dowle v. Lucy (1845), 4 Hare, 311.

(l) R. S. C., Ord. 51, r. 1A (b). No order is necessary for payment of purchase-money into court, but a direction for that purpose signed by the master is sufficient authority for the Paymaster-General to receive the money (R. S. C. Ord. 51, r. 3A).

proceedings must be prefaced by a declaration that the judge is so satisfied and a statement of the evidence upon which such declaration is made (m).

534. Usually the conduct of the sale is committed to the plaintiff or other person having the carriage of the order (n); but the court has a discretion in the matter, and will give the conduct of the sale to any other party if such a course is shown to be for the benefit of those interested (o). The solicitor of the party having the conduct of the sale is deemed, as between the vendor and the purchaser, to be the agent of all parties to the action (p).

Leave to bid may be given to the parties to the action by the order of sale (g), or may be applied for by summons in chambers; but none of the parties ought to bid without such leave (r). If all obtain leave to bid, the conduct of the sale will be given to an independent solicitor (s).

535. The solicitor of the party having the conduct of the sale prepares the particulars, which are entitled in the cause or matter and state that the sale is made with the approbation of the judge under an order, and also the abstract of title. Before the property is put up for sale the abstract must, unless otherwise ordered, be laid before one of the six official conveyancing counsel to the court, or in special circumstances some other conveyancing counsel (t)

The master refers the matter to the conveyancing counsel "in rotation," and this reference being taken to the registrar's office, the proper clerk writes upon it the name of the proper conveyancing counsel. The particulars and conditions of sale having been settled by conveyancing counsel, and his certificate that the sale may proceed having been obtained, the auctioneer is appointed and the amount of his remuneration fixed, and the statement of the reserve price handed to him in a sealed envelope not to be opened till the sale (v).

After the sale the auctioneer and the solicitor of the party having the conduct of the sale certify the result (a). Upon reading their certificate the master makes his certificate of the result of the sale, and, if no application be made within eight days to discharge or vary it, it becomes absolute (b), and the highest bidder then first becomes, strictly speaking, the purchaser (c).

(u) R. S. C., Ord. 51, r. 2. The conditions of sale must specify a time for the delivery of the abstract to the purchaser or his solicitor (ibid.).

(v) See Pitt v. White (1887), 57 L. T. 650; Re Stedman, Coombe v. Vincent (1888), 58 L. T. 709; Re Walford, Walford v. Walford, [1888] W. N. 178. For the scale of remuneration usually allowed, see Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1913, p. 732. There is no practice which entitles an auctioneer to further remuneration if a purchaser is obtained otherwise than through him after an ineffectual attempt to sell by auction (Re Maitland, Pickthall v. Daves, [1903] W. N. 143). The auctioneer must usually give security, if he is authorised to receive the deposit; and he is justified in paying it to the solicitor having the conduct of the sale for the purpose of payment into court (Biggs v. Bree, [1881] W. N. 150; affirmed [1882] W. N. 2, C. A.; Brown v. Farebrother (1888), 58 L. J. (CH.) 3). As to the reserve price, see Daniell, Chancery Forms, 5th ed., pp. 644, 649.

(b) See R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 70; unless there are special circumstances (ibid., r. 71). The practice of opening biddings, except in cases of fraud or misconduct bordering on fraud, is abolished by the Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48); see Delves v. Delves (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 77; Guest v. Smythe (1870), 5 Ch. App. 551; Union Bank v. Munster (1887), 37 Ch. D. 51; Re Bartlett, Newman v. Hook (1880), 16 Ch. D. 561.

(c) Ex parte Minor (1805), 11 Ves. 559; see Twigg v. Fifeild (1807), 13 Ves. 517, 518. Consequently on a subsale at a profit before the certificate is absolute the profit goes to the parties to the action (Hodder v. Ruffin (1830), Tam. 341), but on a subsale afterwards, the original purchaser takes it (Dewell v. Tuffnell (1855), 1 K. & J. 324).

to be implied by law, is called an "open contract" (e). But usually the vendor desires to exclude or modify the terms which would be implied by law, and provisions for this purpose are inserted in a formal contract or in conditions of sale (f).

Good faith.

537. Special stipulations must be expressed in clear and unambiguous language (g), and must neither state nor suggest what is to the knowledge of the vendor incorrect. A condition is misleading, and therefore not binding, if it requires the purchaser to assume that which the vendor knows to be false; or if it affirms that the state of the title is not accurately known to the vendor when in fact it is known (h); or if it stipulates for the commencement of the title with a certain conveyance simpliciter, without disclosing, as is the fact, that the conveyance is a voluntary one (i); or if it is used by a vendor, who knows that he has a bad title, in order to palm such title off upon the purchaser (k).

Particulars.

538. On a sale by auction the property to be sold is described in the particulars; the conditions state the terms on which it is sold (l). A verbal correction of the particulars made by the agreement for the sale of land, if it is to be enforceable, see pp. 290 et seq., ante.

(f) See Hyde v. Dallaway (1842), 4 Beav. 606. In the country it is the practice to use the general printed conditions of the local law society, and supplement them by special conditions. Where after an abortive auction the property is sold by private treaty, the conditions of sale will not be incorporated unless referred to in the contract (Cowley v. Watts (1853), 17 Jur. 172; see Dewar v. Mintoft, [1912] 2 K. B. 373); and see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 509.

(g) Symons v. James (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 487, 490; Taylor v. Martindale (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 658. In case of any ambiguity they will be construed in favour of the party whose rights are restricted, i.e., as a rule, the purchaser (Seaton v. Mapp (1846), 2 Coll. 556, 562; Osborne v. Harvey (1842), 7 Jur. 229; Rhodes v. Ibbetson (1853), 4 De G. M. & G. 787, C. A.; Drysdale v. Mace (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 103; Cruse v. Nowell (1856), 2 Jur. (N. S.) 536; Brumfit v. Morton (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1198; Altmann v. McDaniel, [1912] 1 I. R. 467, 472). But in considering the effect of a condition it may be material that the purchaser is a lawyer (Minet v. Leman (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 340, 352, C. A.).

(h) Re Banister, Broad v. Munton (1879), 12 Ch. D. 131, 143, C. A.; see Harnett v. Baker (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 50; Boyd v. Dickson (1876), 10 I. R. Eq. 239; p. 302, ante. But if the vendor believes the truth of the facts, which the purchaser is required to assume, the condition is not misleading, although it precludes the purchaser from requiring evidence which is essential to the title; and it is not necessary to state in the condition the specific defect which the condition is intended to cover (Re Sandbach and Edmondson's Contract, [1891] 1 Ch. 99, C. A.; compare Nash v. Browne (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 431, which seems questionable; and see Blenkhorn v. Penrose (1880), 29 W. R. 237; *Blaiberg v. (k) Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, Scott v. Alvarez, [1895] 1 Ch. 596, 605, C. A. A fortiori, in the case of a sale by the court, the utmost good faith must be shown (Else v. Else (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 196, 201; Manifold v. Johnston, [1902] 1 I. R. 7); and see pp. 303, note (d), 315, ante.

(l) Torrance v. Bolton (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 124, 130; see note (o), p. 331, post. The particulars should be accurate (see Calverley v. Williams, Williams v. Calverley (1790), 1 Ves. 210), and state any incumbrances, easements, restrictive covenants, and other matters affecting the value of the auctioneer at the sale cannot be admitted to vary the written contract, but it usually prevents the purchaser from obtaining specific performance without the correction (m).

SECT. 1.
In General.

SECT. 2.—Rights under Particular Conditions.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Bidding.

539. On a sale by auction the conditions usually state that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser, that not less than a specified sum, or such sum as shall be fixed by the auctioneer, shall be advanced at each bidding, and that no bidding shall be retracted (n). But the right of a purchaser to retract his bidding before the fall of the hammer (o) does not seem to be negated by such a condition (p).

Bidding.

540. The particulars or conditions of sale must state whether the land will be sold without reserve, or subject to a reserve price, or whether a right to bid is reserved; and, if the sale is without reserve, the vendor may not employ any person to bid thereat, nor may the auctioneer knowingly accept any bidding from such person (q). A sale subject to a reserve price and the reservation of a right to bid are distinct matters (r), and a sale expressed to be subject to a reserve price or to a "reserved bidding" (s) does not give the vendor the right to bid by himself or his agent up to the reserve price (t). Where the conditions expressly reserve the right to bid without further defining it, the vendor may bid himself or employ any one person to do so on his behalf (u); and if the vendor or property (Burnell v. Brown (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 168; Bascomb v. Beckwith (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 100; Torrance v. Bolton (1872), 8 Ch. App. 118).

(p) The bidder comes under no obligation until the vendor accepts his bid by the fall of the hammer (see Jones v. Nannev (1824), 13 Price, 76, 103; Sugden, Vendors and Purchasers, 14th ed., p. 14); but under special circumstances the bidder may be bound (Freer v. Rimner (1844), 14 Sim. 391); compare titles AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., pp. 510 et seq.; SALE OF GOODS, pp. 280, 281, ante.

(q) Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), s. 5; see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., pp. 508, 509.

(r) Although the Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), s. 5, is expressed in the alternative, the conditions may both state that the sale is subject to a reserve price and reserve a right to bid (Gilliat v. Gilliat (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 60), and this is usually done; see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., pp. 275, 276.

(u) Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), s. 6. For a form, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 322. Formerly a puffer—i.e., an agent to bid on behalf of the vendor—was not allowed at law, unless the sale was stated to be subject to a reserve. Whether it was stated to be without reserve, or whether the conditions were silent as to reserve, the employment of a puffer made the sale fraudulent and therefore voidable (Howard v. Castle (1796), 6 Term Rep. 642; R. v. Marsh (1829), 3 Y. & J. 331 (sale on behalf of Crown); Thornett v. Haines (1846), 15 M. & W. 367, 371; Green v. Baverstock (1863), 10 Jur. (N. his agent is to be at liberty to bid more than once (a) and beyond the reserve this should be expressly stated (b).

541. On a sale by auction it is usual to stipulate (c) that the purchaser shall, immediately after the fall of the hammer, pay a deposit to the auctioneer or to the vendor's solicitor (d), and sign a memorandum of the agreement (e). On a sale by private contract also, the vendor frequently insists on payment of a deposit, and it is then usual to provide for payment to the vendor's solicitor or agent as stakeholder (f). The deposit is not merely part payment, but a guarantee of the due performance of the contract by the purchaser. Hence it may be forfeited if the sale goes off owing to his default (g).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Fixtures.

Timber and fixtures.

542. In the absence of special provision, a sale of land includes the fixtures and timber growing on it at the time of the sale (h).

1 Ch. App. 10), and it was the same in equity where the sale was stated to be without reserve (Meadows v. Tanner (1820), 5 Madd. 34; Robinson v. Wall (1847), 2 Ph. 372; Thornett v. Haines, supra). If, however, the conditions were silent as to reserve, then, in equity, one puffer was allowed in order to prevent a sale at an under-value (Woodward v. Miller (1845), 2 Coll. 279; Flint v. Woodin (1852), 9 Hare, 618; Mortimer v. Bell, supra); see Smith v. Clarke (1806), 12 Ves. 477. This was restricted to one puffer, since the employment of more could not be intended for protection against under-value merely, but to enhance the price (Smith v. Clarke, supra; Thornett v. Haines, supra; Mortimer v. Bell, supra). Prevalence has now been given by statute (Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48)) to the common law rule, and it is provided (ibid., s. 4) that a sale of land by auction which would be invalid at law owing to the employment of a puffer is to be deemed invalid also in equity.

(a) See Parfitt v. Jepson (1877), 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 529; title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 509.

(b) See Sale of Land by Auction Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 48), s. 6; Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., pp. 276, 323.

(c) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 277. Without this stipulation no deposit could lawfully be demanded, as the whole consideration is not payable until completion, when the vendor will have shown a good title (Binks v. Rokeby (Lord) (1818), 2 Swan. 222).

(d) The auctioneer receives it as stakeholder (Harington v. Hoggart (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 577). He is not justified in taking an I.O.U. in payment of the deposit (Hodgens v. Keon, [1894] 2 I. R. 657). As to payment by cheque or bill, see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., pp. 503, 512, 513.

(e) If the purchaser refuses to sign the memorandum, it seems that he cannot be compelled to do so (see Wood v. Midgley (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 41, 45, C. A.), though the signature of the auctioneer as his agent will bind him; see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 504. A vendor who improperly prevents a purchaser from signing is liable in damages; see Johnston v. Boyes, [1899] 2 Ch. 73, per COZENS-HARDY, J., at p. 77.

(f) See Wiggins v. Lord (1841), 4 Beav. 30; Ellis v. Goulton, [1893] 1 Q. B. 350, C. A. If the payment is not made to the solicitor as stakeholder, he receives it as agent for the vendor (Bamford v. Shuttleworth (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 926; Edgell v. Day (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 80; Ellis v. Goulton, supra). As to interest on the deposit, see title AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., p. 513; Townshend v. Townshend (1826), 2 Russ. 303; and as to investment of the deposit, see p. 399, post.

(g) Howe v. Smith (1884), 27 Ch. D. 89, C. A.; Hall v. Burnell, [1911] 2 Ch. 551; and see pp. 398 et seq., post, where the subject is fully discussed.

(h) See Colegrave v. Dias Santos (1823), 2 B. & C. 76. As to timber, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 429 et seq.; as to fixtures, see ibid., pp. 416 et seq.

Hence it is very common, both in private sales and on sales by auction, to insert a condition that the fixtures and timber shall be taken at a price stated in the particulars, or at a valuation to be made in a specified manner (i). It is sometimes further provided that, failing such valuation, they shall be taken at a fair valuation or price. This last provision enables the court to direct a reference to ascertain the price (k), whereas without it, if the valuation cannot be made in the manner specified, the court cannot interfere, since that would be to make a new contract for the parties (l).

SECT. 2.
Rights under Particular Conditions.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Title.

543. It is usual to specify the instrument with which the title is to commence (m), and it is necessary to do so if the vendor wishes to commence his abstract with an instrument which is not otherwise a good root of title or to deduce a title for less than the statutory period (n). A purchaser should, however, insist as far as possible on having the full statutory length of title, since he is deemed to have notice of everything that he would have discovered if he had insisted on and investigated the title for the statutory period (o).

Commencement of title.

A condition that the abstract shall commence with a specified document does not preclude the purchaser from investigating the earlier title aliunde if he can (p); but, if the condition stipulates that the earlier title, whether appearing in any abstracted documents or not, shall not be required, investigated or objected to, this Investigation

title.

(i) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 277. Ordinarily trustees cannot contract to sell property at a price to be fixed by valuation, since this is a delegation of their authority (Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Rail. Co. (1880), 16 Ch. D. 703, 713; (1881), 18 Ch. D. 429, 437, C. A.; Re Wilton's (Earl) Settled Estates, [1907] 1 Ch. 50, 55). Hence they cannot in strictness contract to sell timber or fixtures in this way; but since the sale is merely incidental to the sale of the land, it is doubtful whether the strict rule applies; and the court habitually sells timber and fixtures in this way. The difficulty can be avoided by having a valuation made before the sale and stating the amount as the price in the particulars. As to timber on copyhold land, see Crosse v. Keene (1852), 9 Hare, 469; and see note (q), p. 328, post. As to the powers of sale of trustees, see Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 44 (2); title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

(l) See Milnes v. Gery (1807), 14 Ves. 400; Vickers v. Vickers (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 529; p. 292, ante. But the failure of the provision as to valuation does not necessarily make the whole agreement unenforceable (Jackson v. Jackson (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 184; Richardson v. Smith (1870), 5 Ch. App. 648; compare Darkey v. Whitaker (1857), 4 Drew. 134). The court will compel the vendor to allow the valuation to be made (Smith v. Peters (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 511); compare, at law, Tattersall v. Groote (1800), 2 Bos. & P. 131, 135; Livingston v. Ralli (1855), 5 E. & B. 132; title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., p. 441.

precludes inquiry and investigation for every purpose (g); though, if the vendor allows the purchaser to inspect the deeds relating to the earlier title, and thus discloses some blot in the title to the purchaser, the latter is not precluded from raising the objection (r).

544. A vendor may stipulate that the purchaser shall accept such title as he has (s). This condition does not relieve the vendor from the obligation of making out the best title he can from the material in his possession (t); and a purchaser is bound by it, although the title prove defective (a). But the purchaser is entitled to assume that the vendor has disclosed what it was his duty to disclose, and non-disclosure of the existence of onerous covenants affecting the property prevents the condition from being binding upon him (b).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Abstract of Title.

Delivery of abstract.

545. Although a vendor is, independently of any condition for that purpose, bound to deliver an abstract of the title, and that within a reasonable time (c), the contract sometimes contains a condition providing for the delivery of an abstract to the purchaser or his solicitor within a specified time (d). Delivery within such time is not of the essence of the contract (e), and it is for the purchaser, on default by the vendor, to insist on the abstract being sent. If he neglects to apply for it on the day fixed for its delivery (f), or within such a period as will leave time for completion of the contract on the agreed day (g), or if, upon its being tendered after that time, he receives it without demur (h), he will be held to have waived the condition; but, if the vendor fails to deliver an abstract on being pressed by the purchaser to do so, the purchaser can treat the contract as at an end as soon as a reasonable time for delivery has expired (i). Failure to deliver the abstract within the specified time relieves the purchaser from any condition binding him to make his requisitions or objections within a given period after delivery of the abstract (k). The effect is the same if the abstract delivered be imperfect, since the time limited for making requisitions or objections only runs from the time of delivery of a perfect abstract (l), that is an abstract as perfect as the vendor could furnish at the time of delivery, though it may be an abstract of a defective title (m).

(g) Re National Provincial Bank of England and Marsh, [1895] 1 Ch. 190; see Hume v. Bentley (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 520; Re Arran (Earl) and Knowlesden and Creer's Contract, [1912] 2 Ch. 141; Re M'Luire and Garrett's Contract, [1899] 1 I. R. 225; but such a condition is construed strictly, and its terms must be clear and unambiguous (Waddell v. Wolfe (1874), L. R. 9 Q. (c) Compton v. Bagley, [1892] 1 Ch. 313. In case of unreasonable delay, the purchaser should give the vendor notice in writing, fixing a reasonable time within which a proper abstract must be delivered, when the failure of the vendor to deliver accordingly will entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract and recover his deposit (Compton v. Bagley, supra); see, further, as to rescission, p. 402, post.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Requisitions.

546. The conditions of sale usually provide that any requisition or objection arising on the abstract, particulars, or conditions shall be made within a fixed time from the delivery of the abstract; that every requisition and objection not so stated shall be considered as waived; that in default of, or subject only to, such requisitions or objections the purchaser shall be deemed to have accepted the title; and that in this respect time shall be of the essence of the contract (n).

Young* (1788), 2 Esp. 640, n.; Wilde v. Fort (1812), 4 Taunt. 334), but now time is not of the essence of the contract unless it would be so treated in equity; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 154; note (f), p. 332, post.

SECT. 2.

Particular Conditions.

Where vendor's title wholly bad.

Rescission
on requisition being pressed.

The time must be computed only from the delivery of a perfect abstract (o); hence it is usually further provided that the abstract shall be deemed perfect for the purpose of any particular requisition or objection, if it supplies the information suggesting the same, though otherwise defective (p). If the abstract is imperfect, the purchaser is not precluded from making any requisition as to matters subsequently discovered which were not disclosed on the face of the abstract, though the time has expired (q).

A condition limiting the time for requisitions or objections does not apply, where the title of the vendor is wholly bad; it merely applies to such requirements as might have been properly enforced against a vendor who had a valid title (r). Hence it cannot be used to force a bad title on a purchaser who has made his requisitions as to title too late (s), and he is entitled to recover his deposit (t).

547. The conditions usually provide that, if the purchaser insists on any requisition or objection as to title which the vendor is unable or unwilling to remove or comply with, the vendor may, notwithstanding any intermediate negotiation or litigation, or any attempt to remove or comply with the same, by notice in

Smith (1848), 2 Exch. 783; Smithson v. Powell, Powell v. Smithson (1852), 20 L. T. (O. S.) 105. It has been said that in this condition time is of the essence of the contract without express words to that effect (Oakden v. Price (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 666). If there is no stipulation as to time, the purchaser must make his objections within a reasonable time after the delivery of the abstract (Spurrier v. Hancock (1799), 4 Ves. 667). In the event of unreasonable delay, the vendor can by notice limit a reasonable time for sending in objections, and, upon the purchaser's default, rescind the contract (Taylor v. Brown (1839), 2 Beav. 180), or the purchaser may perhaps be assumed to have accepted the title (Pegg v. Wisden (1852), 16 Beav. 239, 244). As to waiver of the condition, see Cutts v. Thodey (1842), 13 Sim. 206.

(o) See p. 323, ante; and as to computation of time, see title TIME.

(p) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 278. The purchaser is not bound by the condition if the vendor fails to deliver the abstract within the time, if any, specified for that purpose in the conditions; see pp. 322, 323, ante.

(q) Warde v. Dixon (1858), 28 L. J. (CH.) 315; and see Gray v. Fowler (1873), L. R. 8 Exch. 249, 267, Ex. Ch. A time corresponding to that in the conditions will be allowed for requisitions after the delivery of the further abstract: compare Sherwin v. Shakspear (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 517, 536, C. A. Consequently, the purchaser is not precluded from taking an objection arising out of evidence called for before, but supplied by the vendor after, the expiration of the time fixed (Blacklow v. Laws (1842), 2 Hare, 40).

(s) Re Tanqueray-Willauwe and Landau (1882), 20 Ch. D. 465, C. A.; Want v. Stallibrass, supra; Saxby v. Thomas (1891), 64 L. T. 65, 67, C. A. In Pryce-Jones v. Williams, [1902] 2 Ch. 517, a distinction was made between requisitions as to the root of title and requisitions as to the subsequent devolution of the title, and it was held that the latter cannot be insisted on if made out of time; but it seems that the true distinction is between matters which would vitiate the title and mere technical objections when a good holding title is shown.

writing (u) annul the sale upon returning the deposit, without interest or costs of investigating title or other compensation (v).

When the condition is framed in this way, it applies only to objections as to title and not to objections as to conveyance (a). Thus, the condition covers an objection in respect of an undisclosed right of way (b), or for want of title to minerals (c); or a requisition that the land should be released from a rentcharge (d), or that legatees or annuitants, whose concurrence the vendor cannot compel, should concur in the conveyance (e). But the condition is usually framed so as to cover also requisitions and objections as to conveyance, such as requisitions requiring a legal estate (f) or the outstanding day of a term (g) to be got in; requiring the concurrence of mortgagees (h), or of the customary heir of copyholds (i); or the appointment of trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts (k); or an objection to the conveyance being made subject to covenants and restrictions, the existence of which did not appear from the particulars or the abstract (l). Although the condition does not in terms refer to requisitions as to conveyance, yet, if it is expressed to include objections as to the title, particulars, conditions and any other matter or thing relating to the sale, it is construed to include requisitions as to conveyance (m).

Where the condition enables the vendor to rescind upon the purchaser "insisting upon" (n) or "persisting in" any requisition, (u) A notice to rescind signed "without prejudice" seems to be void (Re Weston and Thomas's Contract, [1907] 1 Ch. 244, 248).

(v) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 281; M'Culloch v. Gregory (1855), 1 K. & J. 286. This condition is not unduly depreciatory (Falkner v. Equitable Reversionary Society (1858), 4 Drew. 352), though it is unreasonable from the purchaser's point of view (Mooser v. Wisker (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 120, 124). (n) "This reply is unsatisfactory and the purchasers reserve their right to insist" is a sufficient insistence; see Re Dames and Wood (1885), 29 Ch. D. 626, 631, C. A.

there must be (1) an objection by the purchaser, (2) an unwillingness or inability on the part of the vendor to remove the objection, (3) communication to the purchaser of the existence of this unwillingness or inability, and (4) insistence by the purchaser upon his objection notwithstanding this communication (o). But when in the condition the words "make an objection" or "make or take an objection" are substituted for "insist upon an objection," the vendor's right to rescind arises directly the requisitions are sent in, nor need he attempt any answer (p).

rescission.

548. The vendor must exercise the right of rescission reasonably and in good faith, and not arbitrarily or capriciously (q); but, provided he has a good reason for rescinding, he is not bound to state it to the purchaser (r). If the requisition is one which the vendor may reasonably be expected to comply with, he cannot resort to his power to rescind (s). Even if the vendor has a sufficient reason for rescinding under the condition, but has knowingly or recklessly made a material misrepresentation concerning the property, he cannot rescind so as to deprive the purchaser of his option either to rescind or to enforce the contract with compensation (t).

The right to rescind should be exercised in reasonable time (u), and if the vendor seeks to take any unfair advantage of it, as by delaying to exercise it whilst negotiating for a sale to a third party, he loses his election to affirm the contract and the purchaser may treat it as rescinded (a). Where the vendor fails to show any title

(o) Duddell v. Simpson (1866), 2 Ch. App. 102, 109. The vendor must attempt to answer the requisition so as to give the purchaser the opportunity either of waiving it or insisting upon it (Turpin v. Chambers (1861), 29 Beav. 104; Greaves v. Wilson (1858), 25 Beav. 290).

The burden of proof seems to lie on the purchaser. Where the vendor states the reasons in his notice, and is not cross-examined as to his bona fides, to which he has sworn, and there is no evidence imputing bad faith or caprice, the court does not infer against him an unreasonable or capricious use of the power; see Re Starr-Bowkett Building Society and Sibun's Contract, supra, at pp. 383, 384.

(r) Re Glenton and Saunders to Haden, supra; see Woolcott v. Peggie (1889), 15 App. Cas. 42, P. C.
